<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>INTRODUCTION</td>
<td>vii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BIBLIOGRAPHY</td>
<td>xiii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HERCULES FURENS</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TROADES</td>
<td>121</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MEDEA</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HIPPOLYTUS</td>
<td>317</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OEDIPUS</td>
<td>425</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX. COMPARATIVE ANALYSES</td>
<td>525</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INTRODUCTION

Lucius Annaeus Seneca, commonly called the Philosopher to distinguish him from his father, Marcus Annaeus Seneca, the Rhetorician, was born close to the beginning of the Christian era, whether shortly before or shortly after is not certain. He, as was his father before him, was born at Cordova in Spain, the birthplace also of his brilliant nephew, Marcus Annaeus Lucanus. Other notable Spaniards in Roman literature were Columella, born in Gades, Martial, in Bilbilis, and Quintilian, in Calagurris.

The younger Seneca was brought to Rome in early infancy and received his training there. He was a Senator under Caligula and Claudius, and in 41 A.D., through the machinations of Messalina, was ordered by the emperor into exile at Corsica. Thence he was recalled in 49 through the influence of Agrippina, now the wife of Claudius, and to him was entrusted the education of Agrippina’s son, Domitius, afterwards the emperor Nero. During the early years of Nero’s reign, the philosopher had a large influence over his pupil and was virtual ruler for a time. But Nero later became jealous of Seneca’s wealth and influence, and, seizing upon the pretence of Seneca's complicity in the conspiracy of Piso, he forced his old tutor to commit suicide in the year 65.

In philosophy Seneca was a Stoic, but was influenced also by the teachings of the Pythagoreans. His literary fame rests largely upon his philosophical prose works, concerning which Teuffel remarks: "He started from the Stoic system, but in him its barren austerity was toned down, the harshness softened, its crotchets laid aside; nor did he disdain additions from other systems. His paramount purpose is the forcible and eloquent presentation and advocacy of moral principles conducive to the benefit of the individual and of society."

A group of nine tragedies has also come down to us, assigned by tradition to Senecan authorship. A tenth tragedy, the Octavia, has been transmitted with the other nine, but there is fairly good ground for doubting its authenticity. As to the nine, there is no good reason for not considering them the work of Seneca the Philosopher. They agree in general with the philosophical principles and spirit of the prose works, exhibit the same stylistic peculiarities (allowing for the natural difference between prose essay and dramatic poetry) and by their clear stylistic agreement among themselves can readily be accepted as the work of one hand. It should in fairness be said, however, that all critics are not in agreement as to the assignment of all the nine tragedies to Seneca.

1 See note prefixed to the Octavia.
INTRODUCTION

The place of the tragedies of Seneca in literature is unique. They stand, with the exception of a few fragments, as the sole surviving representatives of an extensive Roman product in the tragic drama. They therefore serve as the only connecting link between ancient and modern tragedy. They parallel more or less closely the tragedies of Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides; and the Greek and Roman product in literature along similar lines cannot be better studied than by a comparison of these Senecan plays with their Greek prototypes—a comparison which is not possible in comedy, since, unfortunately, the Greek originals of Plautus and Terence have not come down to us, except in comparatively scanty fragments.

And yet, while Seneca’s tragedies do in most cases parallel the Greek tragedies on corresponding themes, a careful comparative analysis of the Greek and the Latin plays shows quite clearly that Seneca did not take the Greeks for his model in any slavish manner, but, on the contrary, is in many instances surprisingly independent of them both in the introduction of new material and in his use of material common to both. So far as we can judge from the extant fragments, the earlier Roman dramatists, Ennius, Pacuvius and Accius, followed their Greek models, especially Euripides, much more closely, almost to the point of sheer translation.

These plays of Seneca are of great value and interest in themselves, first, as independent dramatic literature of no small merit; and second, as an illustration of the literary characteristics of the age of Nero. It has become quite the fashion among literary critics who include Seneca within their range of observation to pass very harsh judgment upon these tragedies. And they are indeed open to criticism from the standpoint of modern taste, with their florid rhetorical style, their long didactic speeches, their almost ostentatious pride of mythologic lore, their over-sensationalism, which freely admits the horrible and uncanny, their insistent employment of the epigram; and, finally, their introduction of situations which would be impossible from the standpoint of the technique of practical drama.
INTRODUCTION

But in answer to the critic of Seneca's rhetorical faults it should be said that these were the faults of his age, an age when form, when rhetorical devices, when mere locution, had come to be magnified unduly; and as to the shortcomings, or rather the overdoings, of these tragedies from the standpoint of dramatic technique, the obvious answer is that these plays were not written for the stage and there is no evidence that they were acted. This was the age of the declaimer, and it is from the standpoint of declamation that we must both explain the composition of the tragedies and attempt an interpretation of their meaning and an appreciation of their style.

Superficially, Seneca's tragedies present no great difficulties to the translator. But a conscientious attempt to interpret them faithfully encounters the greatest difficulties, which are chargeable partly to confusion in the text due to imperfect transmission, but chiefly to the extreme terseness in Seneca's style, especially in his epigrams; for it is in the epigrammatic part of the plays that the difficulties in interpretation chiefly lie. Difficulties in translation arise also from Seneca's fondness for displaying his mythologic lore, frequently resulting in allusions to points so abstruse as to puzzle the reader who is not thoroughly versed in mythology.
INTRODUCTION

But Seneca, for all his rhetorical liabilities, has some very considerable literary assets. The choruses are, indeed, often prosy, malapropos and disappointing; but here and there we find in these the ring of true poetry, exquisite in its descriptions of natural scenery, genuine in its human touches, and appropriate to the dramatic situation. Such is the chorus in Hercules Furens (lines 125 ff.), in Troades (1009 ff.), in Medea (301 ff.), Agamemnon (52 ff.). He has in his recitativo passages admirable descriptions of natural scenery and simple life, as in Hippolytus (482 ff.); spirited expressions of lofty sentiment, as in Hercules Furens (925 ff.); speeches expressing deep and real passion, as throughout the first half of the Phoenissae, in Medea (199 ff.), Hercules Furens (1321 ff.), Hippolytus (195 ff., 566 ff., 671 ff.), Hercules Oetaeus (1377 ff.), Troades (766 ff., 888 ff.); and numerous sententiae, terse, epigrammatic statements of general ethical truths, which are well worth remembrance and quotation.
INTRODUCTION

The reader will find many echoes of Vergil, Horace, and Ovid scattered through the plays, which serve to claim the tragedies for Latin literature notwithstanding their Greek models. Looking in the other direction, we find that the influence of Seneca's tragedies upon succeeding literature, especially upon English literature in the case of pre-Elizabethan and Elizabethan drama, is very great. A glance at the bibliography following will show something of the extent and importance of this influence.

The text on which this translation is based is that of Leo (Weidmann, Berlin, 1879) except as otherwise explained in the critical notes. Leo's (i.e. the German) punctuation, however, has been freely changed, especially in regard to the continual use of the colon, in order to bring the text into conformity with common English usage.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

I.—The Manuscripts

E Codex Etruscus or Laurentianus, a manuscript now in the Laurentian Library in Florence. This is the most trustworthy manuscript for the text of the plays. Leo calls it unicum lectionis universae fundamentum, unicum genuini tragoediarum corporis exemplar.

To be classed with E, as representing the same recension, are R, T, (both fragments and extracts only), and Σ, a lost copy of E, archetype of M and N.

A An inferior and corrupt recension, to which the other minor manuscripts belong (A¹, ψ, α).

II.—Editions

L. Annaei Senecae Tragoediae, recensuit Johannes Fredericus Gronovius. Lugduni Batavorum, ex officina Elzeviriana, 1661.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

III.—Critical Notes (Textual)

“R. Bentlel notas ad Senecae tragoedias emendandas editioni Gronovianae adscriptas primus edidit A. Stachelscheid in Jahni annalibus (125, p. 481 sq.), post eum et copiosissim rectius E. Hedicke in Studiorum Bentleianorum fasciculo altero p. 9 sq.” (Seneca Bentleianus, Freienwaldiae, 1899.)

B. Schmidt, De Emendandarum Senecae tragoediarum rationibus prosodiaceis et metricis. Berolini, 1860.

IV.—Translations

The Tenne Tragedies of Seneca. Translated into English (1581). Two parts. Printed for the Spenser society, 1887 (Nos. 43, 44).

Tragedius de Séneca. Traduccion en verso de Angel Lasso de la Vega. Madrid, 1783.

See under Studies and Appreciations—Die Tragoedien Senecas in Original und Uebersetzung, etc. By Rudolf Fischer, 1893.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

The Tragedies of Seneca. Translated into English verse, to which have been appended comparative analyses of the corresponding Greek and Roman plays, and a mythological index, by Frank Justus Miller; introduced by an essay on the influence of the tragedies of Seneca upon early English drama, by John Matthews Manly. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press; London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1907.

V.—STUDIES AND APPRECIATIONS

"The Influence of the Tragedies of Seneca upon Early English Drama." By John M. Manly. In Miller's verse translation, q.v.

"Comparative Analyses of Seneca's Tragedies and the Corresponding Greek Dramas." By Frank Justus Miller. In Miller's verse translation, q.v.

VI. —Indices

An Index Verborum for the Tragedies of Seneca is being prepared by Professors Oldfather, Pease, and Canter for publication in the University of Illinois Studies in Language and Literature.
HERCULES FURENS
DRAMATIS PERSONAE

HERCULES, son of Jupiter and Alcmena, but the reputed son of Amphitryon.

JUNO, sister and wife of Jupiter, and queen of Heaven.

AMPHITRYON, husband of Alcmena.

THESEUS, king of Athens and friend of Hercules.

LYCUS, the usurping king of Thebes, who has, prior to the opening of the play, slain King Creon in battle.

MEGARA, wife of Hercules and daughter of Creon.

CHORUS of Thebans.

The scene is laid before the princely palace of Hercules at Thebes, on the day of the return of the hero from the lower world.
ARGUMENT

The jealous wrath of Juno, working through Eurystheus, has imposed twelve mighty and destructive tasks on Hercules, her hated stepson. But these, even to the last and worst, the bringing of Cerberus to the upper world, he has triumphantly accomplished. Abandoning her plan of crushing him by toils like these, she will turn his hand against himself, and so accomplish his destruction. Upon the day of his return from hell she brings a madness on him, and so precipitates the tragedy which forms the action of the play.
HERCVLES FVRENS

IVNO

Soror Tonantis (hoc enim solum mihi nomen relictum est) semper alienum Iovem ac templam summi vidua deservi aetheris locumque caelo pulsa paelicibus dedi; tellus colenda est, paelices caelum tenent. hinc Arctos alta parte glacialis poli sublime classes sidus Argolicas agit; hinc, qua tepenti \(^1\) vere laxatur dies, Tyriae per undas vector Europae nitet; illinc timendum ratibus ac ponto gregem passim vagantes exerunt Atlantidies. ferro minax hinc terret Orion deos suasque Perseus aureus stellas habet; hinc clara gemini signa Tyndaridae micant quibusque natis mobilis tellus stetit. nec ipse tantum Bacchus aut Bacchi parens adiere superos; ne qua pars probro vacet, mundus puellae serta Cnosiacae gerit.

\(^1\) So Richter, with AE\(^2\): Leo recenti, E\(^1\) Σ.
JUNO

The sister of the Thunderer (for this name only is left to me), I have abandoned Jove, always another’s lover; widowed, have left the spaces of high heaven and, banished from the sky, have given up my place to harlots; I must dwell on earth, for harlots hold the sky.¹ Yonder the Bear, high up in the icy North, a lofty constellation, guides the Argive ships; yonder, where in the warm springtime the days grow long, he ² shines who bore the Tyrian Europa across the waves; there the Atlantides,³ far wandering, put forth their band dreadful to ships and sea alike. Here Orion with threatening sword terrifies the gods, and golden Perseus has his stars; the bright constellation of the twin Tyndaridae shines yonder, and they at whose birth the unsteady land stood firm.⁴ And not alone has Bacchus himself or the mother of Bacchus attained the skies; that no place might be free from outrage, the heavens wear the crown of the Cretan maid.⁵

¹ In Greek mythology the constellations which the poet names all have their place in the sky as the result of some amorous intrigue of Jupiter.
² The Bull.
³ The reference would be more naturally to the Hyades as bringers of stormy weather; but nevertheless the Pleiades are evidently meant, since three of these had been beloved of Jove. See Index s.v. "Pleiades."
⁴ See Index s.v. "Delos."
⁵ Ariadne.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Sed vetera querimur: una me dira ac fera Thebana tellus sparsa nuribus impiis qui ges
tic!

escendat licet
meumque victrix teneat Alcmen locum,

pariterque natus astra promissa occupet,— in cuius ortus mundus impedit diem tardusque Eoo Phoebus effulsit mar retinere mersum iussus Oceano iubar,— non sic abibunt odia; vivaces aget violentus iras animus et saevus dolor aeterna bella pace sublata geret.

Quae bella? quidquid horridum tellus creat inimica, quidquid pontus aut aer tuli terrible dirum pestilens atrox ferum, fractum atque domitum est. superat et crescit malis iraque nostra fruitur; in laudes suas mea vertit odia; dum nimis saeva impero, patrem probavi, gloriae feci locum.
qua Sol reducens quaque deponens diem binos propinqua tinguit Aethiopas face, indomita virtus colitur et toto deus narratur orbe. monstra iam desunt mihi minimal labor est Hercul iussa exequi, quam mihi iubere; laetus imperia excipit.
quae fera tyranni iura violento queant nocere iuveni? nempe pro telis gerit quae timuit et quae fudit; armatus venit leone et hydra. nec satis terrae patent;
effregit ecce limen inferni Iovis

6
HERCULES FURENS

19 But I lament ancient wrongs; one land, the baneful and savage land of Thebes, scattered thick with shameless mistresses, how oft has it made me stepdame! Yet, though Alcmena be exalted and in triumph hold my place; though her son, likewise, obtain his promised star (for whose begetting the world lost a day, and Phoebus with tardy light shone forth from the Eastern sea, bidden to keep his bright car sunk beneath Ocean's waves), not in such fashion shall my hatred have its end; my angry soul shall keep up a long-living wrath, and my raging smart, banishing peace, shall wage unending wars.

30 What wars? Whatever fearsome creature the hostile earth produces, whatever the sea or the air has borne, terrific, dreadful, noxious, savage, wild, has been broken and subdued. He rises anew and thrives on trouble; he enjoys my wrath; to his own credit he turns my hate; imposing too cruel tasks, I have but proved his sire, but given room for glory. Where the Sun, as he brings back, and where, as he dismisses day, colours both Ethiop races with neighbouring torch, his unconquered valour is adored, and in all the world he is storied as a god. Now I have no monsters left, and 'tis less labour for Hercules to fulfil my orders than for me to order; with joy he welcomes my commands. What cruel biddings of his tyrant could harm this impetuous youth? Why, he bears as weapons what he once fought and overcame; he goes armed by lion and by hydra. Nor is earth vast enough for him; behold, he has broken down the doors of infernal Jove, and

---

1 See Index s.v. "Hercules."
2 See Index s.v. "Eurystheus."
3 i.e. by the lion's skin, which he used as a shield, and by the hydra's poisonous gall in which he dipped his arrow-points.
et opima victi regis ad superos refert.
vidi ipsa, vidi nocte discussa inferum et Dite domito spolia iactantem patri fraterna. cur non vincitum et oppressum trahit
ipsum catenis paria sortitum Iovi Ereboque capto potitur et retegit Styga?
parum est reverti; foedus umbrarum perit, patefacta ab imis manibus retro via est
et sacra dirae mortis in aperto iacent.
at ille, rupto carcere umbrarum ferox,
de me triumphat et superbifca manu
atrum per urbes ducit Argolicas canem.
viso labantem Cerbero vidi diem pavidumque Solem; me quoque invasit tremor, et terna monstri colla devicti intuens
timui imperasse.

Levia sed nimium queror;
caelo timendum est, regna ne summa occupet
qui vicit ima—sceptra praeripiet patri.
nec in astra lenta veniet ut Bacchus via;
iter ruina quaeret et vacuo volet
regnare mundo. robore experto tumet, et posse caelum viribus vinci suis didicit ferendo; subdidit mundo caput nec flexit umeros molis immensa labor meliusque collo sedit Herculeo polus.
HERCULES FURENS

brings back to the upper world the spoils of a conquered king. I myself saw, yes, saw him, the shadows of nether night dispersed and Dis overthrown, proudly displaying to his father a brother’s spoils. Why does he not drag forth, bound and loaded down with fetters, Pluto himself, who drew a lot equal to Jove’s? Why does he not lord it over conquered Erebus and lay bare the Styx? It is not enough merely to return; the law of the shades has been annulled, a way back has been opened from the lowest ghosts, and the mysteries of dread Death bared. But he, exultant at having burst the prison of the shades, triumphs over me, and with arrogant hand leads through the cities of Greece that dusky hound. I saw the daylight shrink at sight of Cerberus, and the sun pale with fear; upon me, too, terror came, and as I gazed upon the three necks of the conquered monster I trembled at my own command.

63 But I lament too much o’er trivial wrongs. ’Tis for heaven we must fear, lest he seize the highest realms who has overcome the lowest—he will snatch the sceptre from his father. Nor will he come to the stars by a peaceful journey as Bacchus did; he will seek a path through ruin, and will desire to rule in an empty universe. He swells with pride of tested might, and has learned by bearing them that the heavens can be conquered by his strength; he set his head beneath the sky, nor did the burden of that immeasurable mass bend his shoulders, and the firmament rested better on the neck of Hercules.

1 In Roman custom spolia opima were gained when a king met an opposing king in battle, conquered, and despoiled him. In this case the “spoils” was Cerberus; the “king,” Pluto, brother of Jupiter.

2 i.e. than it had on Atlas’ shoulders.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

immota cervix sidera et caelum tulit et me prementem. quaeit ad superos viam.

Perge, ira, perge et magna meditantem opprime, congredere, manibus ipsa dilacera tuis;
quid tanta mandas odia? discedant ferae,
ipse imperando fessus Eurystheus vacet.

Titanas ausos rumpere imperium Iovis emitte, Siculi verticis laxa specum, tellus gigante Doris excusso tremens
supposta monstri colla terrifici levet, sublimis alias Luna concipiat feras.
sed vicit ista. quaeis Alcidae parem?
nemo est nisi ipse; bella iam secum gerat.
adsint ab imo Tartari fundo excitae Eumenides, ignem flammeae spargant comae, viperea saevae verbera incutiant manus.

I nunc, superbe, caelitum sedes pete, humana temne. iam Styga et manes feros
fugisse credis? hic tibi ostendam inferos.
revocabo in alta conditam caligine,
ultra nocentum exilia, discordem deam,
quam munit ingens montis oppositi specus;
educam et imo Ditis e regno extraham
quidquid relictum est; veniet invisum Seelus
suumque lambens sanguinem Impietas ferox Errorque et in se semper armatus Furor—hoc hoc ministro noster utatur dolor!

1 Leo deletes this line.
HERCULES FURENS

Unshaken, his back upbore the stars and the sky and me down-pressing. He seeks a way to the gods above.

Then on, my wrath, on, and crush this plotter of big things; close with him, thyself rend him in pieces with thine own hands. Why to another entrust such hate? Let the wild beasts go their ways, let Eurystheus rest, himself weary with imposing tasks. Set free the Titans who dared invade the majesty of Jove; unbar Sicily's mountain cave, and let the Dorian land, which trembles whenever the giant struggles, set free the buried frame of that dread monster; let Luna in the sky produce still other monstrous creatures. But he has conquered such as these. Dost then seek Alcides' match? None is there save himself; now with himself let him war. Rouse the Eumenides from the lowest abyss of Tartarus; let them be here, let their flaming locks drop fire, and let their savage hands brandish snaky whips.

Go now, proud one, seek the abodes of the immortals and despise man's estate. Dost think that now thou hast escaped the Styx and the cruel ghosts? Here will I show thee infernal shapes. One in deep darkness buried, far down below the place of banishment of guilty souls, will I call up—the goddess Discord, whom a huge cavern, barred by a mountain, guards; I will bring her forth, and drag out from the deepest realm of Dis whatever thou hast left; hateful Crime shall come and reckless Impiety, stained with kindred blood, Error, and Madness, armed ever against itself—this, this be the minister of my smarting wrath!

1 For this whole passage see Index s.v. "Titans" and "Giants."

2 Sicily.

3 The Nemean lion and other monsters were supposed to have fallen from the moon.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Incipite, famulae Ditis, ardentem citae concutite pinum et agmen horrendum anguisbus Megaera ducat atque luctisca manu vastam rogo flagrante corripiat trabem. hoc agite, poenas petite vitiatae Stygis concutite pectus, acrior mentem excoquat quam qui caminis ignis Actnaeis furit. ut possit animo captus Alcides agi, magno furore percitus, nobis prius insaniendum est—Iuno, cur nondum furis? me me, sores, mente deiectam mea versate primam, facere si quicquam apparo dignum noverca. vota mutentur mea; natos reverter videat incolumes precor manuque fortis reate. inveni diem, invisa quo nos Herculis virtus iuvet. me vicit et se vinct et cupiat mori ab inferis reversus. hic prosi mihi love esse genitum. stabo et, ut certo exeat emissa nervo tela, librabo manu, regam furentis arma, pugnanti Herculi tandem favebo. scelere perfecto licet admittat illas genitor in caelum manus! Movenda iam sunt bella; clarescit dies ortuque Titan lucidus croceo subit.

CHORVS

Iam rara micant sidera prono languida mundo; nox victa vagos contrahit ignes luce renata,

1 So A: Leo vobis.
HERCULES FURENS

Begin, handmaids of Dis, make haste to brandish the burning pine; let Megaera lead on her band bristling with serpents and with baleful hand snatch a huge faggot from the blazing pyre. To work! claim vengeance for outraged Styx. Shatter his heart; let a fiercer flame scorch his spirit than rages in Aetna's furnaces. That Alcides may be driven on, robbed of all sense, by mighty fury smitten, mine must be the frenzy first—Juno, why rav'st thou not? Me, ye sisters, me first, bereft of reason, drive to madness, if I am to plan some deed worthy a stepdame's doing. Let my request be changed; may he come back and find his sons unharmed, that is my prayer, and strong of hand may he return. I have found the day when Hercules' hated valour is to be my joy. Me has he overcome; now may he overcome himself and long to die, though late returned from the world of death. Herein may it profit me that he is the son of Jove. I will stand by him and, that his shafts may fly from string unerring, I'll poise them with my hand, guide the madman's weapons, and so at last be on the side of Hercules in the fray. When he has done this crime, then let his father admit those hands to heaven!

Now must my war be set in motion; the sky is brightening and the shining sun steals up in saffron dawn.

CHORUS

Now stars shine few and faint in the sinking sky; vanquished night draws in her wandering fires as the cogit nitidum Phosphoros agmen;

signum celsi glaciale poli

septem stellis Arcados ursae

lucem verso temone vocat.

iam caeruleis evectus equis

Titan summa prospicit Oeta;

iam Cadmeis incluta Bacchis

aspersa die dumeta rubent

Phoebique fugit reditura soror.

labor exoritur durus et omnes

agitat curas aperitque domos.

Pastor gelida cana pruina

grege dimisso pabula carpit;

ludit prato liber aperto

nondum rupta fronte iuvencus,

vacuae reparant ubera matres;

errat cursu levis incerto

molli petulans haedus in herba;

pendet summo stridula ramo

pennasque novo tradere soli

gestit querulos inter nidos

Thracia paelex, turbaque circa

confusa sonat murmure mixto testata diem.

carbasa ventis credit dubius

navita vitae, laxos aura

complente sinus. hic exesis

pendens scopulis aut deceptos

\(^1\) Leo deletes this line.
HERCULES FURENS

new day is born, and Phosphor brings up the rear of the shining host; the icy sign high in the north, the Bears of Arcas, with their seven stars, with wheeling pole \(^1\) summons the dawn. Now, upborne by his azure steeds, Titan peeps forth from Oeta's crest; now the rough brakes, made famous by Theban Bacchants, touched by the dawn, flush red, and Phoebus' sister \(^2\) flees away, to return again. Hard toil arises, sets all cares astir, opens all doors.

\(^{139}\) The shepherd, turning out his flock, plucks pasturage still white with frosty rime. In the open mead the young bullock sports at will, his forehead not yet broken with young horns; the kine at leisure fill again their udders; the sportive kid with unsteady, aimless course wanders on the soft turf; perched on the topmost bough, shrill-voiced, amid her complaining young, the Thracian paramour \(^3\) is eager to spread her wings to the morning sun; and all around a mingled throng sounds forth, proclaiming the dawn of day with varied notes. The sailor, life ever at risk, commits his canvas to the winds, while the breeze fills its flapping folds. Here the fisher, perched on the wave-worn rocks, either rebaits his

\(^1\) The poet has mixed two conceptions of these constellations: (1) the Great Bear and Arctophylax, the "bear-keeper"; (2) the "Wain" and the "Ox-driver" (Boötes).

\(^2\) Phoebe, the moon-goddess.

\(^3\) Philomela, the nightingale, forced to be the mistress of the Thracian Tereus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

instruit hamos aut suspensus spectat pressa praemia dextra;
sentit tremulum linea piscem.

Hace, innocuæ quibus est vitae tranquilla quies et laeta suo parvoque domus; spes immanes urbibus errant trepidique metus.
ille superbos aditus regum
durasque fores expers somni colit, hic nullo fine beatas componit opes gazis inhians et congesto pauper in auro;
illum populi favor attonitum fluctuque magis mobile vulgus aura tumidum tollit inani;
hic clamosi rabiosa fori iurgia vendens improbus iras et verba locat. novit paucos secura quies, qui velocis memores aevi tempora numquam reditura tenent. Dum fata sinunt vivite laeti; properat cursu vita citato volucrique die
rota praecipitis vertitur anni;
durae peragunt pensa sorores
nec sua retro fila revolvunt.
at gens hominum flatur rapidis
obvia fatis incerta sui; Stygias ultro quauerimus undas.
cheated hooks or, with firm grip, watches anxiously for his prize; meantime, his line feels the quivering fish.

159 Such are the tasks of those whose is the peaceful calm of harmless lives, whose home rejoices in the tiny store that is its own; overweening hopes stalk abroad in cities, and trembling fears. One, sleepless, haunts the haughty vestibules and unfeeling doors of his rich patrons; another endlessly heaps up abundant wealth, gloats over his treasures, and is still poor amid piled-up gold. Yonder dazed wretch, with empty wind puffed up, popular applause and the mob more shifting than the sea uplift; this, trafficking in the mad wrangles of the noisy court, shamelessly lets out for hire his passions and his speech. Known to but few is untroubled calm, and they, mindful of time's swift flight, hold fast the days that never will return. While the fates permit, live happily; life speeds on with hurried step, and with winged days the wheel of the headlong year is turned. The harsh sisters 1 ply their tasks, yet do they not spin backward the threads of life. But men are driven, each one uncertain of his own, to meet the speeding fates; we seek the Stygian waves of our own accord. With heart too

1 The Parcae.
nimium, Alcide, pectore fortii properas maestos visere manes;
certo veniunt tempore Parcae.
nulli iusso cessare licet,
nulli scriptum proferre diem;
recipit populos urna citatos.

Alium multis gloria terris
tradat et omnes fama per urbes garrula laudet caelisque parem tollat et astris; alius curru sublimis eat; me mea tellus lare secreto tutoque tegat.
venit ad pigros cana senectus, humilique loco sed certa sedet
sordida parvae fortuna domus;
alte virtus animosa cadit.

Sed maesta venit crine soluto Megara parvum comitata gregem, tardusque senio graditur Alcidae parens.

AMPHITRYON

O magne Olympi rector et mundi arbiter,
iam statue tandem gravibus aerumnis modum finemque cladi. nulla lux umquam mihi secura fult; nullus e nati datur labore fructus; ¹ finis alterius mali
gradus est futuri. protinus reduci novus

¹ Leo supplies nullus . . . fructus as necessary to the sense.
HERCULÉS FURENS

brave, Alcides, thou dost haste to visit the grieving ghosts; at the appointed time the Parcae come. No one may linger when they command, no one may postpone the allotted day; the urn receives the nations hurried to their doom.

192 Let glory laud another to many lands, and let babbling fame sing his praise through every city and lift him to a level with the stars of heaven; let another fare towering in his car; but me let my own land, beside my lonely, sheltered hearth, protect. The inactive reach hoary age, and in a lowly estate but secure stands the mean lot of a humble home; from a lofty height ambitious courage falls.

202 But sad Megara comes hither with streaming hair, her flock of children round her, and, slow with age, the father of Alcides moves.

[Enter from the palace MEGARA with her children, and AMPHITRYON. They take their stand at the altar.]

AMPHITRYON

O mighty ruler of Olympus, judge of all the world, set now at length a limit to our crushing cares, an end to our disasters. No day has ever dawned for me untroubled; no reward from my son’s toil is ever given; the end of one ill is but the step to one beyond. Straightway on his return a new foe is paratur hostis; antequam laetam domum contingat, aliud iussus ad bellum meat; nec ulla requies tempus aut ullum vacat, nisi dum iubetur. sequitur a primo statim infesta Juno; numquid immunis fuit infantis aetas? monstra superavit prius quam nosse posset. gemina cristati caput angues ferebant ora, quos contra obvius reptatabat infans igneos serpantium oculos remisso lumine ac placido intuens; artos serenis vultibus nodos tulit, et tumida tenera guttura elidens manu prolusit hydrae. Maenali pernix fera, multo decorum praeferens auro caput, deprensa cursu est; maximus Nemeae timor pressus lacertis gemuit Herculeis leo. quid stabula memorem dira Bistonii gregis suisque regem pabulum armentis datum, solitumque densis hispidum Erymanthi iugis Arcadia quaterememora Maenalium suem, taurumque centum non levem populis metum? inter remotos gentis Hesperiae greges pastor triformis litoris Tartessii peremptus, acta est praeda ab occasu ultimo; notum Cithaeron pavit Oceano pecus. penetrare iussus solis aevi plagas et adusta medius regna quae torret dies utrimque montes solvit ac rupto obice latam ruenti fecit Oceano viam.
HERCULES FURENS

ready for him; before he can reach his happy home, bidden to another struggle he sets forth; there is no chance to rest, no time left free, save while fresh commands are being given. From his very birth relentless Juno has pursued him; was even his infancy exempt? He conquered monsters before he could know that they were monsters. Serpents twain with crested heads advanced their fangs against him; the infant crawled to meet them, gazing at the snakes' fiery eyes with mild and gentle look; with serene face he raised their close-coiled folds and, crushing their swollen throats with his baby hands, he practised for the hydra. The nimble hind of Maenalus, raising her head bounteously adorned with gold, was caught by his long pursuit;¹ the lion, mightiest dread of Nemea, crushed by the arms of Hercules roared his last. Why should I tell of the horrid stalls of the Bistonian herd and the king² given as food to his own cattle? of the shaggy boar of Maenalus, whose wont it was on the thick-wooded heights of Erymanthus to harry the groves of Arcady? or of the bull, the crushing terror of a hundred towns?³ Among his herds in the distant land of Spain the three-shaped shepherd⁴ of the Tartesian shore was killed and his cattle driven as spoil from the farthest west; Cithaeron has fed the herd once to Ocean known. When bidden⁵ to enter the regions of the summer sun, those scorched realms which midday burns, he clove the mountains on either hand and, rending the barrier, made a wide path⁶ for Ocean's rushing stream.

¹ Hercules chased the hind a year before he caught her.
² See Index s.v. "Diomedes."
³ This was not one of the twelve labours ordered by Eurystheus. See Index s.v. "Hercules."
⁴ Geryon.
⁵ The Straits of Gibraltar.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

post haec adortus nemoris opulentior domos aurifera vigilis spolia serpentis tulit;

quid? saeva Lernae monstra, numerosum malum,
on igne demum vicit et docuit mori, solitascque pennis condere obductis diem petit ab ipsis nubibus Stymphalidas?
non vicit illum caelibis semper tori
regina gentis vidua Thermodontiae;
 nec ad omne clarum facinus audaces manus
stabuli fugavit turpis Augei labor.

Quid ista prosunt? orbe defenso caret.
sensere terrae pacis auctorem suae abesse. rursus prosperum ac felix scelus virtus vocatur; sertibus parent boni, ius est in armis, opprimit leges timor.
ante ora vidi nostra truculenta manu
natos paterni cadere regni vindices ipsumque, Cadmi nobilis stirpem ultimam, occidere, vidi regium capiti deus
cum capite raptum. quis satis Thebas fleat?
ferax deorum terra, quem dominum tremis?
e cuius arvis eque fecundo sinu
stricto iuventus orta cum ferro stetit cuisque muros natus Amphion Iove struxit canoro saxa modulatu trahens,
in cuinis urbem non semel divum parens
caelo relicto venit, haec quae caelites recepit et quae fecit et (fas sit loqui)
fortasse faciet, sordido premitur iugo.
HERCULES FURENS

Next he essayed the rich grove's dwellings and bore off the watchful dragon's golden spoil. Lerna's fell monster, pest manifold, did he not quell at last by fire and teach to die? And the Stymphalian birds, wont to hide the day with veiling wings, did he not bring down from the very clouds? Thermidon's unwed queen of ever virgin couch could not prevail against him, nor did his hands, bold to attempt all glorious deeds, shirk the foul labour of the Augean stalls.

But what avails all this? He is banished from the world which he defended. All the earth has felt that the giver of its peace is lost to it. Once again prosperous and successful crime goes by the name of virtue; good men obey the bad, might is right and fear oppresses law. Before my eyes I saw the sons, defenders of their father's kingdom, fall dead by the murderer's hand, and the king himself fall, last scion of Cadmus' famous line; I saw the royal crown that decked his head torn from him, head and all. Who could lament Thebes enough? O land, fertile in gods, before what lord dost thou tremble now? The city from whose fields and fecund bosom a band of youth stood forth with swords ready drawn, whose walls Jove's son, Amphion, built, drawing its stones by his tuneful melodies—to which not alone came the father of the gods, quitting the sky—this city, which has welcomed gods and has created gods and (may the word be lawful) perchance will yet create them, is oppressed by a

1 The golden apples of the Hesperides.
2 Hippolyte, queen of the Amazons.
3 Creon.
4 Lycus.
5 i.e. they who sprang from Cadmus' sowing of the dragon's teeth.
Cadmea proles atque Ophionium genus, quo reccidistis? tremitis ignavum exulem, suis earentem finibus, nostris gravem. qui scelera terra quique persequitur mari ac saeva iusta sceptra confringit manu nunc servit absens fertque quae fieri vetat, tenetque Thebas exul Herculeas Lycus! sed non tenebit; aderit et poenas petet subitusque ad astra emerget; inveniet viam aut faciet. adsis sospes et remees precor tandemque venias victor ad victam domum!

MEGARA

Emerge, coniunx, atque dispulsas manu abrumpe tenebras; nulla si retro via iterque clusum est, orbe diducto redi et quidquid atra nocte possessum latent emitte tecum. dirutis qualis iugis praeeeps citato flumini quaerens iter quondam stetisti, scissa cum vasto impetu patuere Tempe—pectore impulsus tuo hoc mons et illuc cessit et rupto aggere nova cucurrit Thessalus torrens via—talis, parentes liberos patriam petens, erumpe rerum terminos tecum efferens, et quidquid alia tot per annorum gradus abscondit aetas redile et oblitos sui lucisque pavidos ante te populos age. indigna te sunt spolia, si tantum referes shameful yoke. O seed of Cadmus and Ophion’s race, to what depths have you fallen! You tremble before a dastard exile, of his own land deprived, to ours a burden. But he who avenges crime on land and sea, who with righteous hand breaks cruel sceptres, now far away endures a master and brooks what he elsewhere forbids—and Lycus, the exile, rules the Thebes of Hercules! But not for long; he will be present with us and exact punishment, and suddenly to the sight of the stars will he come forth. He will find a way—or make one. Oh, be present and return in safety, I pray, and come at last victorious to thy vanquished home!
HERCULES FURENS

MEGARA

Come forth, my husband, burst through the darkness shivered by thy hand; if there is no backward way, and the road is closed, rend earth asunder and return; and whatever lies hid in the hold of murky night, let forth with thee. Even as once, rending the hills asunder, seeking for the rushing stream a headlong path, thou stoodst, what time Tempe, cleft by that mighty shock, opened wide—before the thrust of thy breast, this way and that the mountain yielded and through the broken mass the Thessalian torrent raced in its new bed—even so, seeking thy parents, children, fatherland, burst through, bearing away with thee the bounds of things; and all that greedy time through all the march of years has hidden away, restore; and drive out before thee the self-forgetting peoples that fear the light. Unworthy of thee is the spoil, if thou

¹ Eurystheus.
² The Peneus river, a passage for which Hercules is said to have forced between Olympus and Ossa.
quantum imperatum est. magna sed nimium loquor ignara nostrae sortis. unde illum mihi quo te tuamque dexteram amplexar diem reditusque lentos nec mei memores querar?
tibi, o deorum ductor, indomiti furent
centena tauri colla; tibi, frugum potens, secreta reddam sacra; tibi muta fide longas Eleusin tacita iactabit faces.
tum restitutas fratribus rebor meis animas et ipsum regna moderantem sua florere patrem. si qua te maior tenet clausum potestas, sequimur. aut omnes tuo defende reeditu sospes aut omnes trahe—trahes nec ullus erigit fractos deus.

AMPHITRYON
O socia nostri sanguinis, casta fide servans torum natosque magnanimi Herculis, meliora mente concipe atque animum excita.
aderit profecto, qualis ex omni solet
labore, maior.

MEGARA
Quod nimis miserii volunt
hoc facile credunt.

AMPHITRYON
Immo quod metuent nimis
numquam moveri posse nec tolli putant.
prona est timoris semper in peius fides.
HERCULES FURENS

bringst back only what was commanded. But I speak too frowardly, all ignorant of the fate in store for us. Oh, whence shall come that day for me when I shall clasp thee and thy right hand and lament thy long-delayed returns that have no thought of me? To thee, O leader of the gods, a hundred bulls never broken to the yoke shall yield their necks; to thee, goddess of fruits, will I perform thy secret rites; to thee in speechless faith silent Eleusis shall toss long trains of torches. Then shall I deem their lives restored unto my brothers, my father himself governing his own realm and flourishing. But if some greater power is holding thee in durance, we follow thee. Either defend us all by thy safe return, or drag us all with thee—thou wilt drag us down, nor will any god lift up our broken house.

AMPHITRYON

O ally of my blood, preserving with chaste faith the couch and children of the great-souled Hercules, have better thought and rouse thy courage. Surely he will come home, as is his wont from every task, the greater.

MEGARA

What the wretched overmuch desire, they easily believe.

AMPHITRYON

Nay, what they fear overmuch they think can never be set aside or done away. Fear's trust inclineth ever to the worse.

1 Ceres.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MEGARA

Demersus ac defossus et toto insuper oppressus orbe quam viam ad superos habet?

AMPHITRYON

Quam tunc habebat cum per arentem plagam et fluctuantes more turbati maris adit harenas bisque discedens fretum et bis recurrens, cumque deserta rate deprensus haesit Syrtium brevibus vadis et puppe fixa maria superavit pedes.

MEGARA

Iniqua raro maximis virtutibus fortuna parcit; nemo se tuto diu periculis offerre tam crebris potest. quem saepe transit casus, aliquando invenit. Sed ecce saevus ac minas vultu gerens et qualis animo est talis incessu venit. aliena dextra sceptr a concutiens Lycus.

LYCVS

Vrbis regens opulenta Thebanae loca et omne quidquid uberi cingit solo obliqua Phocis, quidquid Ismenos rigat, quidquid Cithaeron vertice excelso videt, et bina findens Isthmos exilis freta, non vetera patriae iura possideo domus

\footnote{Leo deletes this line.}
Submerged, deep-buried; crushed beneath all the world, what way has he to upper air?

The same he had when across the parched desert and the sands, billowing like the stormy sea, he made his way, and across the strait with twice-receding, twice-returning waves; and when, his barque abandoned, he was stranded, a prisoner on Syrtes' shoals, and, though his vessel was held fast, he crossed o'er seas on foot.¹

Unrighteous fortune seldom spares the highest worth; no one with safety can long front so frequent perils. Whom calamity oft passes by she finds at last.

But see, ferocious and with threats upon his brow, the same in gait and spirit, Lycus comes, brandishing another's sceptre in his hand.

Ruling the rich domains of Thebes and all that sloping Phocis encompasses with its rich soil, whatever Istenus waters, whatever Cithaeron views from his high peak, and slender Isthmus, keeping asunder its twin straits, no ancient rights of an ancestral home

¹ Hercules was once wrecked off the African coast and made his way on foot to the shore.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ignavus heres; nobiles non sunt mihi avi nec altis inclitum titulis genus, sed clara virtus. qui genus iactat suum,
aliens laudat. rapta sed trepida manu
sceptrum obtinentur; omnis in ferro est salus;
quod civibus tenere te invititis scias strictus tueatur ensis. alieno in loco haut stabile regnum est; una sed nostras potest fundare vires iuncta regali face thalamisque Megara. ducet e genere inclito novitas colorem nostra. non equidem reor
fore ut recuset ac meos spernat toros;
quod si impotentem pertinax animo abnuet,
stat tollere omnem penitus Herculeam domum.
invidia factum ac sermo popularis premet?
ars prima regni est posse invidiam pati.\(^1\)
temptemus igitur, fors dedit nobis locum;
namque ipsa, tristi vestis obtentu caput velata, iuxta praesides astat deos laterique adhaeret verus Alcidae sator.

MEGARA

Quidnam iste, nostri generis exitium ac lues, novi parat? quid temptat?

LYCVS

O clarum trahens
a stirpe nomen regia, facillis mea

\(^1\) So \(E\): ad invidiam \(A\): te invidiam \(\psi\): to avoid the hiatus, Leo suggests posse rumores pati or plebis invidiam pati.
do I possess, a slothful heir; not mine are noble ancestors, nor a race illustrious with lofty titles, but valour glorious. Who vaunts his race, lauds what belongs to others. But usurped sceptres are held in anxious hand; all safety is in arms; what thou knowest thou holdest against the will of citizens, the drawn sword must guard. On alien soil kingship stands not sure; but one there is who can set my power on firm foundations, if joined to me in royal wedlock by torch and couch—Megara. From her noble line my newness shall gain richer hue. Nor do I think she will refuse and scorn my bed; but if stubbornly and with headstrong will she shall decline, it is my resolve to give to utter ruin the whole house of Hercules. Shall hatred and the common people's talk restrain my hand? 'Tis the first art of kings, the power to suffer hate. Let us make trial, therefore; chance has given us occasion; for Megara herself, her head close-veiled in mourning vestments, stands by the altar of her protecting gods, and close by her side keeps the true sire of Hercules.

MEGARA

What new thing plans that fellow, that destruction and pestilence of our race? What does he attempt?

LYCUS

O thou whose illustrious name is drawn from royal stock, graciously listen to my words a little
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

parumper aure verba patienti excipe.
si aeterna semper odia mortales gerant
nec coeptus umquam cedat ex animis furor, sed arma felix teneat infelix paret,
nihil relinquent bella; tum vastis ager squalebit arvis, subdita tectis face
altus sepultas obruet gentes cinis.
pacem reduci velle victori expedit,
victo necesse est—particeps regno veni;
sociemur animis, pignus hoc fidei cape—
continge dextram. quid truci vultu siles?

MEGARA

Egone ut parentis sanguine aspersam manum fratrunque gemina caede contingam? prius extinguet ortus, referet occasus diem, pax ante fida nivibus et flammis erit et Scylla Siculum iunget Ausonio latus, priusque multo vicibus alternis fugax Euripus unda stabit Euboica piger.
patrem abstulisti, regna, germanos, larem patrim—quid ultra est? una res superest mihi fratre ac parente carior, regno ac lare—odium tui, quod esse cum populo mihi commune doleo. pars quota ex illo mea est?
dominare tumidus, spiritus altos gere;
sequitur superbos ulter a tergo deus.
Thebana novi regna; quid matres loquir
passas et ausas scelera? quid geminum nefas
while with patient ear. If mortals should cherish everlasting hate and if mad rage, once felt, should never drop from our hearts, but if the victor should keep and the vanquished prepare arms, nothing will wars leave us; then on the wasted farms the fields will lie untilled, the torch will be set to homes, and deep ashes will overwhelm the buried nations. 'Tis expedient for the victor to wish for peace restored; for the vanquished 'tis necessity.—Come, share my throne; let us be joined in purpose; accept this pledge of faith—touch hands with me. Why in grim-faced silence dost thou stand?

MEGARA

I touch a hand stained with my father's blood and with my brothers' double murder? Sooner shall the East extinguish, the West bring back, the day; sooner shall snow and flame be in lasting harmony and Scylla join the Sicilian and Ausonian shores; and sooner far shall swift Euripus with his alternating tides rest sluggish upon Euboea's strand! My father hast thou taken from me, my kingdom, brothers, my ancestral home—what is there else? There is one thing left to me, dearer than brother and father, kingdom and home—my hate of thee, which it is my grief that I must share with all the populace. How small a part of it is mine! Rule on, swollen with pride, lift thy spirits high; an avenging god pursues the proud. I know the Theban realm; why mention the crimes which mothers have endured and dared? Why speak of the mixtumque nomen coniugis nati patris?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

quid bina fratrum castra? quid totidem rogos?
riget superba Tantalis luctu parens
maestusque Phrygio manat in Sipylo lapis.
quid torum subrigens caput Illyrica Cadmus regna permensus fuga longas reliquit corporis tracti notas.
haec te manent exempla. dominarut libet
dum solita regni fata te nostri vocent.

LYCVS

Agedum efferatas rabida voce amove et discerum imperia ab Alcide pati.
egorapta quamvis sceptricgeram
dextra regamque cuncta sine legum metu quas arma vincunt, pauca pro causa loquar nostra. cruento cecidit in bello pater?
ecidere fratres? arma non servant modum;
nec temperari facile nec reprimi potest
stricti ensis ira; bella delectat cruror.
sed ille regno pro suo, nos improba
cupidine acti? quaeritur belli exitus,
non causa. sed nunc percat omnis memoria;
cum victor arma posuit, et victum dece deponere odio. non ut inflesx genu regnantem adores petimus; hoc ipsum placet animo ruinas quod capis magno tuas;
es rege coniunx digna; sociemus toros.
HERCULES FURENS

double infamy and the confused names of husband, son and sire? Why speak of the brothers’ two-fold camps? the two funeral-pyres? The daughter of Tantalus, presumptuous mother, stiffens with grief and, mournful on Phrygian Sipylus, drips tears—a stone. Nay, Cadmus himself reared a head fierce with its crest and, traversing Illyria’s realm in flight, left the long trail of his dragging body. Thee do such precedents of doom await. Lord it as thou wilt, if only the accustomed destinies of our realm summon thee.

LYCUS

Come, mad woman, have done with this wild talk, and learn from Alcides to endure the commands of kings. Although I wield a sceptre seized by my victorious hand, though I rule all things without fear of laws which arms o’ermaster, still will I say a few words in mine own cause. ’Twas in a cruel war thy father fell, sayest thou? thy brothers, too? Arms observe no bounds; nor can the wrath of the sword, once drawn, be easily checked or stayed; war delights in blood. But he fought for his realm, sayest thou; we, impelled by insatiable ambition? Of war men ask the outcome, not the cause. But now let all the past be forgotten; when the victor has laid down his arms, it is meet that the vanquished, too, lay down his hate. That thou on bended knee shouldst pray to me as thy sovereign I do not ask; this of itself is pleasing to me, that thou dost take thy overthrow with a high spirit. Worthy art thou to be a king’s mate; then let us wed.

1 The reference is to Oedipus. 2 Eteocles and Polynices. 3 Niobe. 4 Cadmus was changed into a serpent.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MEGARA

Gelidus per artus vadit exangues tremor. quod facinus aures pepulit? haut equidem horru, cum pace rupta bellicus muros fragor circumsonaret, pertuli intrepide omnia; thalamos tremesco; capta nunc videor mihi. gravent catenae corpus et longa fame mors protrahatur lenta; non vincet fidem vis ulla nostram. moriar, Alcide, tua.

LYCVS

Animosne mersus inferis coniunx facit?

MEGARA

Inferna tetigit, posset ut supera assequi.

LYCVS

Telluris illum pondus immensae premit.

MEGARA

Nullo premetur onere, qui caelum tulit.

LYCVS

Cogere.

MEGARA

Cogi qui potest nescit mori.
HERCULES FURENS

MEGARA

Cold horror creeps through my bloodless limbs. What outrage has struck my ears? No terror felt I when peace was broken and war's loud crash rang around our walls; dauntlessly I bore it all; but marriage—I shudder at it; now do I indeed seem captive. Let chains load down my body, and let me die a lingering death by slow starvation; still shall no power o'ercome my loyalty. Alcides, I shall die thine own.

LYCUS

Does a husband buried in the depths produce such spirit?

MEGARA

He reached the depths that he might gain the heights.

LYCUS

The weight of the boundless earth crushes him.

MEGARA

By no weight will he be crushed who upbore the heavens.

LYCUS

Thou shalt be forced.

MEGARA

Who can be forced has not learned how to die.
Senecae Tragoediae

Lycurvs

Eflare potius, quod novis thalamis parem
Regale munus.

Megara

Aut tuam mortem aut meam.

Lycurvs

Morie re demens.

Megara

Coniugi occurram meo.

Lycurvs

Sceptrone nostro famulus est potior tibi?

Megara

Quot iste famulus tradidit reges neci.

Lycurvs

Cur ergo regi servit et patitur iugum?

Megara

Imperia dura tolle—quid virtus erit?

Lycurvs

Obici feris monstrisque virtutem putas?
LYCUS

Say rather, what royal gift I shall prepare for my new bride.

MEGARA

Thy death or mine.

LYCUS

Fool, thou shalt die.

MEGARA

So shall I meet my husband.

LYCUS

Is a slave more to thee than I, a king?

MEGARA

How many kings has that slave given to death!

LYCUS

Why, then, does he serve a king and endure the yoke?

MEGARA

Do away with harsh commands—what then will valour be?

LYCUS

To oppose oneself to beasts and monsters think'st thou valour?
SENCAE TRAGOEDIAE

MEGARA

Virtutis est domare quae cuncti pavent.

LYCVS

Tenebrae loquentem magna Tartarcae premunt.

MEGARA

Non est ad astra mollis e terris via.

LYCVS

Quo patre genitus caelitum sperat domos?

AMPHITRYON

Miseranda coniunx Herculis magni, sile; partes meae sunt reddere Alcidae patrem genusque verum. post tot ingenti viri memoranda facta postque pacatum manu quodcumque Titan ortus et labens videt, post monstra tot perdomita, post Phlegram impio sparsam cruore postque defensos deos nondum liquet de patre? mentimur Iovem? Iunonis odio crede.

LYCVS

Quid violas Iovem?
mortale caelo non potest iungi genus.

40
HERCULES FURENS

MEGARA

'Tis valour's part to subdue what all men fear.

LYCUS

The shades of Tartarus bury the braggart deep.

MEGARA

There is no easy way to the stars from earth.

LYCUS

Who is his father that he hopes for a home in heaven?

AMPHITRYON

Unhappy wife of great Hercules, be still; 'tis my place to restore to Alcides his father and true lineage. [To Lycus.] After all the great hero's memorable deeds, after peace has been gained by his hand for all that the sun, rising and setting, sees, after so many monsters tamed, after Phlegra\(^1\) stained with impious blood, after his protection of the gods, is not his fathering yet clear? Claim we Jove falsely? Then believe Juno's hate.

LYCUS

Why blaspheme Jove? The race of mortals cannot mate with heaven.

---

\(^1\) The scene of the battle between the giants and the gods. Hercules fought on the side of the gods.
Communis ista pluribus causa est deis.

Famuline fuerant ante quam fierent dei?

Pastor Pheraeos Delius pavit greges—

Sed non per omnes exul erravit plagas.

Quem profuga terra mater errante edidit?

Num monstra saeva Phoebus aut timuit feras?

Primus sagittas imbuit Phoebi draco.

Quam gravia parvus tulerit ignoras mala?

E matris utero fulmine ejectus puer mox fulminanti proximus patri stetit.
HERCULES FURENS

AMPHITRYON
That is the common origin of many gods.

LYCUS
But were they slaves ere they became divine?

AMPHITRYON
The Delian as a shepherd tended flocks at Pherae—

LYCUS
But he did not in exile roam o'er all the world.

AMPHITRYON
What? He whom an exiled mother brought forth on a roaming isle?

LYCUS
Did Phoebus encounter savage monsters or wild beasts?

AMPHITRYON
A dragon was the first to stain Phoebus' shafts.

LYCUS
Knowest thou not what heavy ills he bore in infancy?

AMPHITRYON
Ripped by a thunderbolt from his mother's womb, a boy in after-time stood next his sire, the

1 As was Hercules to Eurystheus.
2 The reference is to Apollo's year of servitude to Admetus.
3 Bacchus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

quid? qui gubernat astra, qui nubes quatit, non latuit infans rupis Idaeae specu? sollicita tanti pretia natales habent semperque magno constitit nasci deum.

LYCVS

Quemcumque miserum videris, hominem scias.

AMPHITRYON

Quemcumque fortem videris, miserum neges.

LYCVS

Fortem vocemus cuius ex umbris leo, donum puellae factus, et clava excidit fulsitque pictum veste Sidonia latus? fortem vocemus cuius horrentes comae maduere nardo, laude qui notas manus ad non virilem tympani movit sonum, mitra ferocem barbaro frontem premens?

AMPHITRYON

Non erubescit Bacchus effusos tener sparsisse crines nec manu molli levem vibrare thyrsus, cum parum forti gradu auro decorum syrma barbarico trahit. post multa virtus opera laxari solet.

LYCVS

Hoc Euryti fatetur eversi domus pecorumque ritu virginum oppressi greges;
HERCULES FURENS

Thunderer. What? he who rules the stars, who shakes the clouds, did he not lie hid in infancy in a cave of rocky Ida? Such lofty birth must pay its price of care, and ever has it cost dear to be born a god.

LYCUS

Whome'er thou shalt see wretched, know him man.

AMPHITRYON

Whome'er thou shalt see brave, call him not wretched.

LYCUS

Are we to call him brave from whose shoulders fell the lion's skin and club, made present for a girl,¹ and whose side shone resplendent, decked out in Tyrian robes? Call him brave, whose bristling locks dripped with nard, who busied those famous hands with unmanly strummings on the tambourine, whose warlike brow a barbaric turban crowned?

AMPHITRYON

But dainty Bacchus does not blush to sprinkle with perfume his flowing locks, nor in his soft hand to brandish the slender thyrsus, when with mincing gait he trails his robe gay with barbaric gold. After much toil, valour still seeks relief.

LYCUS

That fact the ruined house of Eurytus confesses, and the flocks of maidens harried like so many sheep; no

¹ Omphale.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

hoc nulla luno, nullus Eurystheus iubet; ipsius haec sunt opera.

AMPHITRYON

Non nosti omnia; 480
ipsius opus est caestibus fractus suis Eryx et Eryei iunctus Antaeus Libys, et qui hospitali caede manantes foci
bibere iustum sanguinem Busiridis;
ipsius opus est vulneri et ferro invius mortem coactus integer Cyenus pati, nec unus una Geryon victus manu.
eris inter istos—qui tamen nullo stupro
laesere thalamos.

LYCVS

Quod Iovi hoc regi licet.
Iovi dedisti coniugem, regi dabit; 490
et te magistro non novum hoc discet nurus, etiam viro probante, meliorem sequi.
sin copulari pertinax taedes negat,
vel ex coacta nobilem partum feram.

MEGARA

Vmbrae Creontis et penates Labdaci et nuptiales impii Oedipodae faces, nunc solita nostro fata coniugio date.
nunc, nunc, cruente regis Aegypti nurus,
adeste multo sanguine infectae manus.
dest una numero Danais—explebo nefas. 500

46
HERCULES FURENS

Juno, no Eurystheus ordered this; these works are his very own.

AMPHITRYON

Thou knowest not all; his own work it is that Eryx was crushed by his own gauntlets and that Libyan Antaeus shared Eryx' fate; that the altars which dripped with the blood of strangers drank, and justly, too, Busiris' blood; his own work is Cyncus, though proof against wound and sword, forced to suffer death untouched by wounds; and threefold Geryon by one hand overcome. Thou shalt share the fate of these—and yet they never defiled with lust the marriage-bed.

LYCUS

What is Jove's right is a king's right, too. Thou gavest thy wife 1 to Jove, to a king shall he give his 2 ; and taught by thy example thy daughter shall learn this old-time lesson—when the husband also gives consent, to take the better man. But should she stubbornly refuse to wed me by the torches' rite, even by force will I get me a noble stock from her.

MEGARA

Ye shades of Creon, ye household gods of Labdacus, ye nuptial torches of incestuous Oedipus, now to our union grant its accustomed doom. Now, now, ye bloody daughters of King Aegyptus, be present here, your hands deep-stained in blood. One Danaid is lacking from the tale—I will complete the crime.

1 Alcmena.
2 Megara.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

LYCVS

Coniugia quoniam pervicax nostra abnusis regemque terres, sceptra quid possint scies. complectere aras—nullus eripiet deus te mihi, nec orbe si remolito queat ad supera victor numina Alcides vehi. congerite silvas; templa supplicibus suis iniecta flagrent, coniugem et totum gregem consumat unus igne subiecto rogus.

AMPHITRYON

Hoc munus a te genitor Alcidae peto, rogare quod me deceat, ut prnus cadam.

LYCVS

Qui morte cunctos luere supplicium iubet nescit tyrannus esse. diversa inroga: miserum veta perire, felicem iube. ego, dum cremandis trabibus accrescit rogus, sacro regentem maria votivo colam.

AMPHITRYON

Pro numinum vis summa, pro caelestium rector parentique, cuius excussis tremunt humana telis, impiam regis feri compesce dextram—quid deos frustra precor? ubicumque es, audi, nate. cur subito labant agitata motu templa? cur mugit solum? infernus imo sonuit e fundo fragor.¹ audimur, est est sonitus Herculei gradus.

¹ Leo deletis this line.
HERCULES FURENS

LYCUS

Since my suit thou dost stubbornly refuse and threatenest thy king, now shalt thou know what royal power can do. Embrace the altar—no god shall snatch thee from me, not though earth's mass could be pushed aside and Alcides brought back in triumph to the upper world. [To attendants.] Heap high the logs; let the temple fall blazing on its suppliants; apply the torch and let one pyre consume the wife and all her brood.

AMPHITRYON

This boon as father of Alcides I ask of thee, which becomes me well to ask, that I be first to fall.

LYCUS

He who inflicts on all the penalty of death knows not how to be a king. Impose contrasting penalties: forbid the wretched, command the happy man to die. Now while the pyre feeds on the burning beams, with promised gifts will I worship him who rules the sea. [Exit.

AMPHITRYON

O mightiest of gods, O ruler and sire of the immortals, at whose hurtling bolts mortals tremble, check thou the impious hand of this mad king—why make vain prayers unto the gods? Where'er thou art, hear thou, my son. But why with sudden motion does the rocking temple totter? Why does earth rumble? Infernal crashing has sounded from the lowest pit. Our prayer is heard; it is, it is the resounding tread of Hercules!
O Fortuna viris invida fortibus, quam non aequa bonis praemia dividis.
"Eurystheus facili regnet in otio; Alcmena genitus bella per omnia monstris exagitct caeliferam manum:
serpentis resecet colla feracia,
deceptis referat mala sororibus,
cum somno dederit pervigiles genas
pomis divitibus praepositus draco."

Intravit Scythiae multivagas domos et gentes patriis sedibus hospitas, calcvavitque freti terga rigentia
et mutis tacitum litoribus mare, illic dura carent aequora fluctibus,
et qua plena rates carbasat tenderant,
intonsis teritur semita Sarmatis.
stat pontus, vicibus mobilis annuis,
navem nunc facilis nunc equitem pati.
illic quae viduis gentibus imperat,
aurato religans ilia balteo,
detraxit spolium nobile corpori
et peltam et nivei vincula pectoris, victorem posito suspiciens genu.
Qua spe praecipites actus ad inferos,
audax ire vias inremeabiles,
vidisti Siculacae regna Proserpinae?
illic nulla noto nulla favonio
HERCULES FURENS

CHORUS

O Fortune, jealous of the brave, in allotting thy favours how unjust art thou unto the good! "Let Eurystheus lord it in untroubled ease; let Alemena's son in endless wars employ on monsters the hand that bore the heavens; let him cut off the hydra's teeming necks; let him bring back the apples from the cheated sisters when the dragon, set to watch over the precious fruit, has given his ever-waking eyes to sleep." ¹

He invaded the wandering homes of Scythia and nations strangers to their ancestral haunts; ² he trod the sea's frozen ridge, a still ocean with silent shores. There the frozen waters are without waves, and where but now ships had spread full sail, a path is worn by the long-haired Sarmatae. There lies the sea, changing as seasons change, ready to bear now ship, now horseman. There she ³ who rules o'er tribes unwed, with a golden girdle about her loins, stripped the glorious spoil from her body, her shield and the bands of her snow-white breast, on bended knee looking up to her victor.

With what hope, driven headlong to the depths, bold to tread ways irretraceable, didst thou see Sicilian Proserpina's realms? There beneath no southern, no western wind do the seas rise

¹ A supposed quotation from Fortune's decree.
² These were nomadic tribes.
³ Hippolyte, queen of the Amazons.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

consurgunt tumidis fluctibus aequora; non illic geminum Tyndaridae genus succurrunt timidis sidera navibus: stat nigro pelagus gurgite languidum, et cum Mors avidis pallida dentibus gentes innumeratas manibus intulit, uno tot populi remige transeunt.

Evincas utinam iura ferae Stygis Parcarumque colos non revocabiles. hic qui rex populis pluribus imperat, bello cum peteres Nestoream Pylon, tecum conseruit pestiferas manus telum tergemina cuspide praeferen: effugit tenui vulnere sauciis et mortis dominus pertinuit mori. fatum rumpe manu, tristibus inferis prospectus pateat lucis et invius limes det faciles ad superos vias!

Immites potuit flectere cantibus umbrarum dominos et prece supplici

Orpheus, Eurydicen dum repetit suam. quae silvas et aves saxaque traxerat ars, quae praeberat fluminibus moras, ad cuius sonitum constiterant ferae, mulcet non solitis vocibus inferos et surdis resonat clarius in locis. deflent Eurydicen Threiciae nurus,¹

¹ Placed after 580 in A: Tartareae nurus Withof: Elysiae Bentley.
HERCULES FURENS

with swollen waves; there the stars of the twin Tyndaridae come not to the aid of timorous ships; sluggish stands the mere\(^1\) with black abyss, and, when Death, pale-visaged with greedy teeth, has brought countless tribes to the world of shades, one ferryman transports those many peoples.

558 Oh, that thou mayest o'ercome the laws of cruel Styx, and the relentless distaffs of the Fates. He\(^2\) who as king lords it o'er countless peoples, what time thou wast making war on Pylos, Nestor's land, brought to combat with thee his plague-dealing hands, brandishing his three-forked spear, yet fled away, with but a slight wound smitten, and, though lord of death, feared he would die. Fate's bars burst thou with thy hands; to the sad nether regions open a view of light, and let the trackless path\(^3\) now give easy passage to the upper world!

569 Orpheus had power to bend the ruthless lords of the shades by song and suppliant prayer, when he sought back his Eurydice. The art which had drawn the trees and birds and rocks, which had stayed the course of rivers, at whose sound the beasts had stopped to listen, soothes the underworld with unaccustomed strains, and rings out clearer in those unhearing realms. Eurydice the Thracian brides bewail; even the gods,

\(^1\) The Styx.
\(^2\) Pluto. The reference is to the combat of Hercules against Pluto in defence of the Pylians.
\(^3\) i.e. between life and death.
SENECAE TRAGOEDJAE

deflent et lacrimis difficiles dei, et qui fronte nimis crimina tetrica quarerunt ac veteres excutiunt reos flentes Eurydice iuridici sedent.
tandem mortis ait "vincimur" arbiter,
"evade ad superos, lege tamen data—
tu post terga tuui perge viri comes,
tu non ante tuam respice coniugem,
quam cum clara deos obtulerit dies Spartanique aderit ianua Taenari."
odit verus amor nec patitur moras;
manus dum properat cernere, perdidit.
Quae vinci potuit regia carmine,
haec vinci poterit regia viribus.

HERCVLES

O lucis almae rector et caeli decus, qui alterna curru spatia flamifero ambiens
inlustre latis exeris terris caput, da, Phoebe, veniam, si quid inlicitum tu videre vultus; iussus in lucem extuli arcana mundi. tuque, caelestum arbiter parensque, visus fulmine opposito tege;
et tu, secundo maria qui sceptro regis,
imas pete undas. quisquis ex alto aspicit terrena, facie pollui metuens nova,
aciem reflectat oraque in caelum erigat portenta fugiens. hoc nefas cernant duo, qui advexit et quaè iussit. in poenas meas
whom no tears can move, bewail her; and they who with awful brows investigate men's crimes and sift out ancient wrongs, as they sit in judgment¹ bewail Eurydice. At length death's lord exclaims: "We own defeat; go forth to the upper world, yet by this appointed doom—fare thou as comrade behind thy husband, and thou, look not back upon thy wife until bright day shall have revealed the gods of heaven, and the opening of Spartan Taenarus shall be at hand." True love hates delay and brooks it not; while he hastes to look upon his prize, 'tis lost.

⁵⁹⁰ The realm which could be overcome by song, that realm shall strength have power to overcome.

[Enter Hercules, just returned from the lower world, accompanied by Theseus; apparently, also, he is leading the dog, Cerberus, though this point seems less clear as the play develops.]

HERCULES

O lord of kindly light, glory of heaven, who in thy flame-bearing car dost circle both spaces² of the sky, and dost show thy shining face to the broad lands, pardon, O Phoebus, if any unlawful sight thine eyes have seen; at another's bidding have I brought to light the hidden things of earth. And thou, O judge and sire of heavenly beings, hide thy face behind thy thunderbolt; and thou who, next in power, dost control the seas, flee to thy lowest waters. Whoever from on high looks down on things of earth, and would not be defiled by a strange, new sight, let him turn away his gaze, lift his eyes to heaven, and shun the portent. Let only two look on this monster—him who brought and her ¹ It is impossible to reproduce in translation the obvious pun in Eurydiced iuridici.

² i.e. the upper and lower hemispheres.
atque in labores non satis terrae patent Iunonis odio. vidi inaccessa omnibus, ignota Phoebo quaeque deterior polus
obscura diro spatia concessit Iovi;
et, si placèrent tertiae sortis loca, regnare potui. noctis aeternae chaos et nocte quiddam gravius et tristes deos et fata vidi, morte contempta redi.
quid restat aliud? vidi et ostendi inferos.
da si quid ultra est, iam diu pateris manus
cessare nostras, Iuno; quae vinci iubes?
Sed templum quare miles infestus tenet limenque sacrum terror armorum obsidet?

AMPHITRYON

Vtrumne visus vota decipiunt meos,
an ille domitor orbis et Graium decus
tristi silentem nubilo liquit domum?
estne ille natus? membra laetitia stuptent.
o nate, certa at sera Thebarum salus, teneone in auras editum an vana fruor deceptus umbra? tune es? agnosco toros umerosque et alto nobilem truncu manum.

HERCVLES

Vnde iste, genitor, squalor et lugubribus
amieta coniunx? unde tam foedo obsiti paedore nati? quae domum clades gravat?
HERCULES FURENS

who ordered it. To appoint me penalties and tasks earth is not broad enough for Juno's hate. I have seen places unapproached by any, unknown to Phoebus, those gloomy spaces which the baser pole hath yielded to infernal Jove; and if the regions of the third estate pleased me, I might have reigned. The chaos of everlasting night, and something worse than night, and the grim gods and the fates—all these I saw and, having flouted death, I have come back. What else remains? I have seen and revealed the lower world. If aught is left to do, give it to me, O Juno; too long already dost thou let my hands lie idle. What dost thou bid me conquer?

But why do hostile soldiers guard the shrine and dreadful arms beset the sacred portal?

AMPHITRYON

Can it be that my hopes deceive my sight, or has that world-subduer, the pride of Greece, come back from the silent halls of mournful gloom? Is that my son? My limbs are numb with joy. O son, sure, though late, deliverance of Thebes, do I really clasp thee risen to upper air, or am I mocked, enjoying but an empty shade? Is it thou indeed? Aye, now I recognize the bulging thews, the shoulders, the hand famed for its huge club.

HERCULES

Whence this squalid garb, father? Why is my wife clad in mourning weeds? Why are my sons covered with loathsome rags? What disaster overwhelms my house?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

AMPHITRYON

Socer est peremptus, regna possedit Lycus, natos parentem coniugem leto petit.

HERCVLES

Ingrata tellus, nemo ad Herculeae domus auxilia venit? vidit hoc tantum nefas defensus orbis?—cur diem questu tero? mactetur hostia, hanc ferat virtus notam fiatque summus hostis Alcidae Lycus. ad hauriendum sanguinem inimicum feror, Theseu; resiste, ne qua vis subita ingruat. me bella poscunt, differ amplexus, parens, coniunxque differ. nuntiet Diti Lycus me iam redisse.

THESEVS

Flebilem ex oculis fuga, regina, vultum, tuque nato sospite lacrimas cadentes reprime. si novi Herculem, Lycus Creonti debitas poenas dabit. lentum est dabit—dat; hoc quoque est lentum—dedit.

AMPHITRYON

Votum secundet qui potest nostrum deus rebusque lapsis adsit. O magni comes magnanime nati, pande virtutum ordinem, quam longa maestos ducat ad manes via, ut vincla tulerit dura Tartareus canis.
HERCULES FURENS

AMPHITRYON

The father of thy wife is slain; Lycus has seized the throne; thy sons, thy father, thy wife he claims for death.

HERCULES

O ungrateful land, was there none to aid the house of Hercules? Did it see this monstrous wrong, the world I succoured?—but why waste the day in idle plaints? Let the victim be offered up, let my manhood bear this brand of shame, and let the final foe of Hercules be—Lycus. I haste me, Theseus, to drain his detested blood; remain thou here, lest some unexpected force assail. War summons me; delay thy embraces, father; wife, delay them. Let Lycus take the news to Dis that now I have returned.

[Exit Hercules.]

THESEUS

Banish that tearful look from thine eyes, O queen, and do thou, since thy son is safe, check thy falling tears. If I know Hercules, Lycus shall pay the penalty he owes to Creon. "Shall pay" is slow—he pays; that, too, is slow—he has paid.

AMPHITRYON

May the god who can, fulfil our desire and favour our fallen estate. And do thou, great-hearted companion of our great son, unfold his heroic deeds in order; tell how long a way leads to the gloomy shades, and how the Tartarean dog bore his galling bonds.

1 i.e. Lycus. 2 To Amphitryon.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

THESEVS

Memorare cogis acta securae quoque horrenda menti. vix adhuc certa est fides vitalis aurae, torpet acies luminum hebetesque visus vix diem insuetum ferunt.

AMPHITRYON

Pervince, Theseu, quidquid alto in pectore remanet pavoris neve te fructu optimo frauda laborum; quae fuit durum pati, meminisse dulce est. fare casus horridos.

THESEVS

Fas omne mundi teque dominantem precor regno capaci teque quam amotam inrita quaesivit Enna mater, ut iura abdita et operta terris liceat impune eloqui. Spartana tellus nobile attollit ingum, densis ubi aequor Taenarus silvis premit; hic ora solvit Ditis invis domus hiatque rupes alta et immenso specu ingens vorago faucibus vastis patet latumque pandit omnibus populis iter, non caeca tenebris incipit primo via; tenuis relictae lucis a tergo nitor fulgorque dubius solis adficti cadit et ludit aciem. nocte sic mixta solet praebere lumen primus aut serus dies.
HERCULES FURENS

THESEUS

Thou dost force me to recall deeds which strike terror to my soul even in security. Scarcely yet do I trust assuredly to breathe the vital air; the sight of my eyes is dimmed, and my dull vision can scarce bear the unaccustomed light.

AMPHITRYON

But, Theseus, master whate’er of dread yet dwells deep in thy heart and rob not thyself of toils’ best fruit; things ’twas hard to bear ’tis pleasant to recall. Tell thou the awful tale.

THESEUS

All the world’s holy powers, and thou\(^1\) who rulest the all-holding realm, and thou\(^2\) whom, stolen from Enna, thy mother sought in vain, may it be right, I pray, boldly to speak of powers hidden away and buried beneath the earth.

\(^{662}\) The Spartan land a famous ridge uplifts where Taenarus with its dense forests invades the sea. Here the home of hateful Pluto unbars its mouth; a high cliff cracks asunder, and a huge chasm, a bottomless abyss, spreads its vast jaws wide and opens for all peoples a broad path. Not in utter darkness does the way first begin; a slender gleam of the light left behind and a doubtful glow as of the sun in eclipse falls there and cheats the vision. Such light the day mingled with night is wont to give, at early dawn or at late twilight. From here ample spaces spread out,

\(^1\) Pluto.  \(^2\) Proserpina.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

hinc ampla vacuis spatia laxantur locis,
in quae omne versum properat humanum genus.
nec ire labor est; ipsa deducit via.

ut saepe puppes aestus invitas rapit,
sie pronus aer urguet atque avidum chaos,
gradumque retro flectere sunt umquam sinunt umbrae tenaces. intus immensi sinus placido quieta labitur Lethe vado demitque curas, neve remeandi amplius pateat facultas, flexibus multis gravem involvit amnem, qualis incertis vagus Maeander undis ludit et eedit sibi instatque dubius litus an fontem petat.
palus inertis foeda Cocyt iacet;
hic vultur, illie luctifer bubo gemit
omenque triste resonat infaustae strigis.
horrent opaca fronde nigrantes comae,
taxum imminentem qua tenet segnis Sopor
Famesque maesta tabido rictu iacet
Pudorque serus conscio vultus tegit.
Metus Pavorque furvus et frendens Dolor
aterque Luctus sequitur et Morbus tremens et cincta ferro Bella; in extremo abdita iners Senectus adiuvat baculo gradum.

AMPHITRYON

Estne aliquam tellus Cereris aut Bacchi ferax?
HERCULES FURENS

void regions, whereto the entire human race turns and hastens. It is no toil to go; the road itself draws them down. As oft-times the waves sweep on unwilling ships, so does the downward breeze drive, and the greedy void, and never do the clutching shades permit a backward step. Within the abyss, Lethe, measureless in sweep, glides smoothly on with placid stream, and takes away our cares; and, that there may be no power to retrace the path, with windings manifold it takes its sluggish way, even as the vagrant Maeander with its inconstant waters plays along, now retreats upon itself, now presses on, in doubt whether to seek the seashore or its source. The foul pool of Cocytus' sluggish stream lies here; here the vulture, there the dole-bringing owl utters its cry, and the sad omen of the gruesome screech-owl sounds. The leaves shudder, black with gloomy foliage where sluggish Sleep clings to the overhanging yew, where sad Hunger lies with wasted jaws, and Shame, too late, hides her guilt-burdened face. Dread stalks there, gloomy Fear and gnashing Pain, sable Grief, tottering Disease and iron-girt War; and last of all slow Age supports his steps upon a staff.

AMPHITRYON

Is any land there fruitful of corn or wine?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

THESEVS

Non prata viridi laeta facie germinant nec adulta leni fluctuat Zephyro seges;
non ulla ramos silva pomiferos habet:
sterilis profundi vastitas squalet soli et foeda tellus torpet aeterno situ, rerumque maestus finis et mundi ultima. 1
immotus aer haeret et pigro sedet nox atra mundo. cuncta maerore horrida ipsaque morte peior est mortis locus.

AMPHITRYON

Quid ille opaca qui regit sceptrro loca, qua sede positus temperat populos leves?

THESEVS

Est in recessu Tartari obscuro locus, quam gravibus umbris spissa caligo alligat.
a fonte discors manat hinc uno latex,
alter quieto similis (hunc iurant dei)
tacente sacram devehens fluvio Styga;
at hic tumultu rapitur ingenti ferox et saxa fluctu volvit Acheron invius renavigari. cingitur duplici vado adversa Ditis regia, atque ingens domus umbrante luco tegitur. hic vasto specu pendent tyranni limina, hoc umbris iter, haec porta regni. campus hanc circa iacet,

1 Leo deletes this line.
HERCULES FURENS

THESEUS

No meadows bud, joyous with verdant view, no ripened corn waves in the gentle breeze; not any grove has fruit-producing boughs; the barren desert of the abysmal fields lies all untilled, and the foul land lies torpid in endless sloth—sad end of things, the world’s last estate. The air hangs motionless and black night broods over a sluggish world. All things are with grief dishevelled, and worse than death itself is the abode of death.

AMPHITRYON

What of him who holds sway over the dark realm? Where sits he, governing his flitting tribes?

THESEUS

There is a place in a dark recess of Tartarus, which with a heavy pall dense mists enshroud. Hence flow from a single source two streams, unlike: one, a placid river (by this do the gods swear), with silent current bears on the sacred Styx; the other with mighty roar rushes fiercely on, rolling down rocks in its flood, Acheron, that cannot be recrossed. The royal hall of Dis stands opposite, girt by a double moat, and the huge house is hid by an o’ershadowing grove. Here in a spacious cavern the tyrant’s doors overhang; this is the road for spirits, this is the kingdom’s gate. A plain lies round about this where sits the
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

in quo superbo digerit vultu sedens animas recentes dira maestas dei.
frons torva, fratrum quae tamen speciem gerat
gentisque tantae, vultus est illi Iovis, sed fulminantis; magna pars regni trucis est ipse dominus, cuius aspectus timet quidquid timetur.

AMPHITRYON

Verane est fama inferis
tam sera reddi iura et oblitos sui sceleris nocentes debitas poenas dare?
quis iste veri rector atque aequi arbiter?

THESEVS

Non unus alta sede quaesitor sedens iudicia trepidis sera sortitur reis.
aditur illo Cnosi Minos foro, Rhadamanthus illo, Thetidis hoc audit socer.
quod quisque fecit, patitur; auctorem scelus
repetit suoque premitur exemplo nocens.
vidi cruentos carceri includi duces
et impotentis terga plebeia manu scindi tyranni. quisquis est placide potens dominusque vitae servat innocuas manus et incruentum mitis imperium regit animoque parcit, longa permensus diu felicis aevi spatia vel caelum petit vel laeta felix nemoris Elysii loca, ijex futurus. sanguine humano abstine quienique regnas; scelera taxantur modo maiore vestra.

66
HERCULES FURENS

god, where with haughty mien his awful majesty assorts the new-arriving souls. Lowering is his brow, yet such as wears the aspect of his brothers and his high race; his countenance is that of Jove, but Jove the thunderer; chief part of that realm's grimness is its own lord, whose aspect whate'er is dreaded dreads.

AMPHITRYON

Is the report true that in the underworld justice, though tardy, is meted out, and that guilty souls who have forgot their crimes suffer due punishment? Who is that lord of truth, that arbiter of justice?

THESEUS

Not one inquisitor alone sits on the high judgment-seat and allots his tardy sentences to trembling culprits. In yonder court they pass to Cretan Minos' presence, in that to Rhadamanthus', here the father of Thetis' spouse gives audience. What each has done, he suffers; upon its author the crime comes back, and the guilty soul is crushed by its own form of guilt. I have seen bloody chiefs immured in prison; the insolent tyrant's back torn by plebeian hands. He who reigns mildly and, though lord of life, keeps guiltless hands, who mercifully and without bloodshed rules his realm, checking his own spirit, he shall traverse long stretches of happy life and at last gain the skies, or else in bliss reach Elysium's joyful land and sit in judgment there. Abstain from human blood, all ye who rule: with heavier punishment your sins are judged.

1 Aeacus, father of Peleus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

AMPHITRYON

Certus inclusos tenet
locus nocentes? utque fert fama, impios
supplicia vinclis saeva perpetuis domant?

THESEVS

Rapitur volucri tortus Ixion rota;
cervice saxum grande Sisyphia sedet;
in amne medio faucibus siccis senex
sectatur undas, alluit mentum latex, fidemque cum iam saepe decepto dedit,
perit unda in ore; poma destituunt famem.
præbet volucri Tityos aeternas dapes
urnasque frustra Danaides plenas gerunt;
errant furentes impiae Cadmeides
terretque mensas avida Phineas avis.

AMPHITRYON

Nunc ede nati nobilem pugnam mei.
patrui volentis munus an spolium refert?

THESEVS

Ferale tardis imminet saxum vadis,
stupent ubi undae, segne torpescit fretum.
hunc servat amnem cultu et aspectu horridus pavidosque manes squalidus vectat senex.
inpexa pendet barba, deformem sinum
nodus coercet, concavae squalent ¹ genae;

¹ So E: Richter, with A, lucent: Leo conjectures fulgent.
HERCULES FURENS

AMPHITRYON

Does any certain place enclose the guilty? and, as rumour has it, do sinners suffer cruel punishments in bonds unending?

AMPHITRYON

Now tell my son's famous struggle. Is it his willing uncle's gift, or his spoil, he brings?

THESEUS

A rock funereal o'erhangs the slothful shoals, where the waves are sluggish and the dull mere is numbed. This stream an old man tends, clad in foul garb and to the sight abhorrent, and ferries over the quaking shades. His beard hangs down unkempt; a knot ties his robe's misshapen folds; haggard his sunken cheeks; himself his own boatman, with a long

1 Tantalus.
2 The harpy.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

regit ipse longo portitor conto ratem.
hic onere vacuum litori puppem applicans repetebat umbras; poscit Alcides viam
cedente turba; dirus exclamat Charon:
"quo pergis, audax? siste properantem gradum."
non passus ullas natus Alcmena moras ipso coactum navitam conto domat scanditque puppem. cumba populum capax succubuit uni; sidit et gravior ratis utrimque Lethe latere titubanti bibit.
tum victa trepidant monstra, Centauri truces Lapithaeque multo in bella succensi mero; Stygiae paludis ultimos quaerens sinus
fecunda mergit capita Lernaeus labor.

Post haec avari Ditis appareat domus:
hic saevus umbras territat Stygius canis,
qui terna vasto capita concutiens sono regnum tuetur. sordidum tabo caput lambunt colubrae, viperis horrent iubae longusque torta sibilat cauda draco.
par ira formae. sensit ut motus pedum, attoilit hirtas angue vibrato comas missumque captat aure subrecta sonum, sentire et umbras solitus. ut propior stetit Iove natus, antro sedit incertus canis leviterque timuit—ecce latratu gravi loca muta terret; sibilat totos minax serpens per armos. vocis horrendae fragor per ora missus terna felices quoque

70
pole he directs his craft. Now, having discharged his load, he is turning his boat towards the bank, seeking the ghosts again; Alcides demands passage, while the crowd draws back. Fierce Charon cries: "Whither in such haste, bold man? Halt there thy hastening steps." Brooking no delay, Alemena's son o'erpowers the ferryman with his own pole and climbs aboard. The craft, ample for whole nations, sinks low beneath one man; as he takes his seat the o'erweighted boat with rocking sides drinks in Lethe on either hand. Then the monsters he had conquered are in a panic, the fierce Centaurs and the Lapithae whom too much wine had inflamed to war; and, seeking the farthest fens of the Stygian swamp, Lerna's labour plunges deep his fertile heads.

Next after this there appears the palace of greedy Dis. Here the savage Stygian dog frightens the shades; tossing back and forth his triple heads, with huge bayings he guards the realm. Around his head, foul with corruption, serpents lap, his shaggy mane bristles with vipers, and in his twisted tail a long snake hisses. His rage matches his shape. Soon as he feels the stir of feet he raises his head, rough with darting snakes, and with ears erect catches at the onsped sound, wont as he is to hear even the shades. When the son of Jove stood closer, within his cave the dog crouches hesitant and feels a touch of fear. Then suddenly, with deep bayings, he terrifies the silent places; the snakes hiss threateningly along all his shoulders. The clamour of his dreadful voice, issuing from triple throats, fills even the

1 The Hydra.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

exterret umbras. solvit a laeva feros tunc ipse rictus et Cleonaeum caput opponit ae se tegmine ingenti tegit, victrice magnum dextera robur gerens.
huc nunc et illuc verbere assiduo rotat, ingeminat ictus. domitus insregit minas et cuncta lassus capita summisit canis antroque toto cessit. extimuit sedens uterque solio dominus et duci iubet;
me quoque petenti munus Alcidae dedit.

Tum gravia monstri colla permulcens manu
adamante texto vincit; oblitus sui custos opaci pervigil regni canis componit aures timidus et patiens trahi erumque fassus, ore summisso obsequens, utronque cauda pulsat anguisera latus.
postquam est adoras Taenari ventum et nitor
percussit oculos lucis ignotae novus, resumit animos victus et vastas furens quassat catenas; paene victorem abstulit pronumque retro vexit et movit gradu, tunc et meas respexit Alcides manus;
geminis uterque viribus tractum canem
ira furentem et bella temptantem inrita intulimus orbi. vidit ut clarum diem et pura nitidi spatia conspexit poli, oborta nox est, lumina in terram dedit;¹
compressit oculos et diem invisum expulit

¹ Leo deletes this line.
blessed shades with dread. Then from his left arm the hero looses the fierce-grinning jaws, thrusts out before him the Cleonaean head and, beneath that huge shield crouching, plies his mighty club with victorious right hand. Now here, now there, with unremitting blows he whirls it, redoubling the strokes. At last the dog, vanquished, ceases his threatenings and, spent with struggle, lowers all his heads and yields all wardship of the cavern. Both rulers shiver on their throne, and bid lead the dog away. Me also they give as boon to Alcides' prayer.

Then, stroking the monster's sullen necks, he binds him with chains of adamant. Forgetful of himself, the watchful guardian of the dusky realm droops his ears, trembling and willing to be led, owns his master, and with muzzle lowered follows after, beating both his sides with snaky tail. But when he came to the Taenarian borders, and the strange gleam of unknown light smote on his eyes, though conquered he regained his courage and in frenzy shook his ponderous chains. Almost he bore his conqueror away, back dragging him, forward bent, and forced him to give ground. Then even to my aid Alcides looked, and with our twofold strength we drew the dog along, mad with rage and attempting fruitless war, and brought him out to earth. But when he saw the bright light of day and viewed the clear spaces of the shining sky, black night rose over him and he turned his gaze to ground, closed tight his eyes and shut out the hated light; back-

1 i.e. of the Nemean lion, so called from Cleonae, near Nemea, in Argolis.
2 Pluto and Proserpina.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE
faciemque retro flexit atque omni petit cervice terram; tum sub Herculeas caput abscondit umbras. densa sed laeto venit clamore turba frontibus laurum gerens
magnique meritas Herculis laudes canit.

CHORVS

Natus Eurystheus properante partu iusserat mundi penetrare fundum;
derat hoc solum numero laborum,
tertiae regem spoliare sortis.
ausus es caecos aditus inire,
ducit ad manes via qua remotos tristis et nigra metuenda Silva, sed frequens magna comitante turba.

Quantus incedit populus per urbes
ad novi ludos avidus theatris;
quantus Eleum ruit ad Tonantem,
quinta cum sacrum revocavit aetas;
quanta, cum longae redit hora nocti crescere et somnos cupiens quietos
libra Phoebos tenet aqua currus, turba secretam Cererem frequentat et citi tectis properant relictis Attici noctem celebrare mystae, tanta per campos agitur silentes
turba; pars tarda graditur senecta, tristis et longa satiata vita;
pars adhuc currit melioris aevi,
ward he turned his face and with all his necks sought the earth; then in the shadow of Hercules he hid his head.—But see, a dense throng comes on, glad shouting, with laurel wreaths upon their brows and chanting the well-won praises of great Hercules.

CHORUS

Eurystheus, brought to the light by birth untimely, had bidden thee explore the world's foundations; this only was lacking to thy tale of labours, to despoil the king of the third estate. Thou wast bold to enter the blind approach, where a way leads to the far-off shades, a gloomy way and fearsome with dark woods, but crowded with vast accompanying throngs.

838 Great as the host that moves through city streets, eager to see the spectacle in some new theatre; great as that which pours to the Elean Thunderer, when the fifth summer has brought back the sacred games; great as the throng which (when the time comes again for night to lengthen and the balanced Scales,2 yearning for quiet slumber, check Phoebus' car) surges to Ceres' secret rites, and the initiates of Attica, quitting their homes, swiftly hasten to celebrate their night—so great is the throng that is led through the silent plains. Some go slow with age, sad and sated with long life; some still can run,

1 i.e. Olympian. The reference is to the Olympic games, celebrated in honour of Zeus.

2 See Index.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

virgines nondum thalamis iugatae et comis nondum positis ephebi, matris et nomen modo doctus infans.
his datum solis, minus ut timerent,
igne praelato relevare noctem;
ceteri vadunt per opaca tristes.
qualis est vobis animus, remota
luce cum maestus sibi quisque sensit obrutum tota caput esse terra?
stat chaos densum tenebraeque turpes et color noctis malus ac silentis
otium mundi vacuaeque nubes.
Sera nos illo referat senectus;
nemo ad id sero venit, unde numquam,
cum semel venit, potuit reverti;
quid iuvat durum properare fatum?
omnis haec magnis vaga turba terris ibit ad manes facietque inerti vela Coctyo. tibi crescit omne, et quod occasus videt et quod ortus
—parce venturis—tibi, mors, paramur.
sis licet segnis, properamus ipsi;
prima quae vitam dedit hora, carpit.

Thebis laeta dies adest.
aras tangite, supplices,
pingues caedite victimas;
permixtae maribus nurus
sollemnes agitent choros;
cessent deposito iugo
arvi fertilis incolae.
HERCULES FURENS

being of happier age—maidens, not yet in wedlock joined, youths with locks still unshorn, and babes that have but lately learned the name of "mother." To these last alone, that they be not afraid, 'tis given to lessen night's gloom by torches borne ahead; the rest move sadly through the dark. O ye dead, what thoughts are yours when, light now banished, each has sorrowing felt his head o'erwhelmed 'neath all the earth? There are thick chaos, loathsome murk, night's baleful hue, the lethargy of a silent world and empty clouds.

864 Late may old age bear us thither! None comes too late unto that land, whence never, when once come, can he return. Why does it please us to hasten cruel fate? For all this throng which wanders up and down the earth's vast spaces shall go to the world of shades and shall set sail on Cocytus' lifeless stream. For thee, O Death, all things are growing; all that the setting sun, all that the rising, sees—oh, spare thou those who are sure to come—for thee are we all preparing. Though thou be slow, we hasten of ourselves; the hour which first gave life is plucking it away.

875 Thebes' joyful day is here. Lay hold on the altars, ye suppliants; slay the fat victims; let husbands and wives together start up the festal dance; let the tillers of the fertile field lay by the yoke and rest.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Pax est Herculea manu Auroram inter et Hesperum, et qua sol medium tenens
umbros corporibus negat;
quodcumque alluitur solum
longo Tethyos ambitu, Alcidae domuit labor.
transvectus vada Tartari
pacatis redit inferis;
iam nullus superest timor;
nil ultra iacet inferos.

Stantes, sacrificus, comas
dilecta tege populo.

HERCVLIS

Victrice dextra fusus adverso Lycus terram cecidit ore; tum quisquis comes fuerat tyranni iacuit et poenae comes.
nunc sacra patri victor et superis feram
ciaesisque meritas victimis aras colam.

Te te laborum socia et adiutrix precor, belligera Pallas, cuius in laeva ciet
aegis feroes ore saxifico minas;
adsit Lycurgi domitor et rubri maris,
tectam virente cuspidem thyrso gerens,
geminumque numen Phoebus et Phoebi soror, soror sagittis aptior, Phoebus lyrae, fraterque quisquis incolit caelum meus
non ex noverca frater.
Peace reigns by the hand of Hercules from the land of the dawn to the evening star, and where the sun, holding mid-heaven, gives to shapes no shadows. Whatever land is washed by Tethys' far-reaching circuit Alcides' toil has conquered. He has crossed the streams of Tartarus, subdued the gods of the underworld, and has returned. And now no fear remains; naught lies beyond the underworld.

Now, priest, bedeck thy bristling hair with his well-loved poplar.

[Enter Hercules, fresh from the slaying of Lycurus.]

Felled by my conquering hand, Lycus face down has smitten the earth. Next, whoever had been the tyrant's comrade lies low, the comrade also of his punishment. And now as victor will I bring offerings to my father and to the heavenly gods, slay victims, and honour the altars with due sacrifice.

Thee, thee, O ally and helper of my toils, I pray, O warlike Pallas, on whose left arm the targe with its petrifying face sends forth fierce threats; may he, too, be near, the tamer of Lycurgus and the ruddy sea, who bears a spear-point hidden beneath his vine-wreathed staff; and ye, twin deities, Phoebus and Phoebus' sister, the sister more ready with her arrows, Phoebus with his lyre; and whatever brother of mine dwells in the sky—but not a brother from my stepdame born.

1 i.e. with the divine aëlius. Compare Virgil's description of the Sibyl, Aeneid VI. 48: non compae mansere conae.
2 Bacchus.
3 Which Bacchus crossed when he conquered India.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Huc appellete
greges opimos; quidquid Indorum seges Arabesque odoris quidquid arboribus legunt conferte in aras; pinguis exundet vapor.
populea nostras arbor exornet eomas,
te ramus oleae fronde gentili tegat, Theseu; Tonantem nostra adorabit manus,
tu conditores urbis et silvestria
trucis antra Zethi, nobilis Dircen aquae laremque regis advenae Tyrium coles.
date tura flammis.

AMPHITRYON

Nate, manantes prius
manus cruenta caede et hostili expia.

HERCULES

Vtinam eruore capitis invisii deis libare possem; gratior nullus liquor tinxisset aras; victima haut ulla amplior potest magisque opima mactari Iovi, quam rex iniquus.

AMPHITRYON

Finiat genitor tuos
opta labores, detur aliquando otium quiesque fessis.

Leo conjectures a lacuna here, and suggests that some such line as this has fallen out after 909:
praestat colonis igne propriis dei.
Hercules Furens

[To his attendants.]

903 Hither drive fat herds; whatever the fields of the Indians produce, whatever fragrant thing the Arabs gather from their trees, heap on the altars; let the rich smoke roll on high. Let wreaths of poplar bedeck our hair; but thee, O Theseus, an olive-branch, with thy own race's leaves, shall crown. The Thunderer shall my hand adore; do thou 1 invoke the founders of our city, the wooded caves of savage Zethus, Dirce of far-famed water, and the Tyrian house-gods of our pilgrim king. 2 Heap incense on the flames.

Amphitryon

O son, first purify thy hands, dripping with thy slaughtered foeman's blood.

Hercules

Would that I could pour out to the gods the blood of the man I hate; no more pleasing stream had stained the altars; no greater, richer victim can be sacrificed to Jove than an unrighteous king.

Amphitryon

Pray that thy father end thy toils, that at last rest and repose be given to the weary.

1 Addressed to Amphitryon. 2 Cadmus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

HERCVLES

Ipse concipiam preces
love meque dignas: stet suo caelum loco tellusque et aequor; astra inoffensos agant aeterna cursus; alta pax gentes alat;
ferrum omne teneat ruris innocui labor ensesque lateant; nulla tempestas fretum violentata turbet, nullus irato love exiliat ignis, nullus hiberna nive
nutritus agros amnis eversos trahat.
venena cessent, nulla nocituro gravis
suco tumescat herba. non saevi ac truces regnent tyranni. si quod etiamnum est scelus latura tellus, properet, et si quod parat monstrum, meum sit.

Sed quid hoc? medium diem einxere tenebrae. Phoebus obscuro meat sine nube vultu. quis diem retro fugat agitque in ortus? unde nox atrum caput ignota profert? unde tot stellae polum implent diurnae? primus en noster labor caeli refulget parte non minima leo iraque totus fervet et morsus parat.
iam rapiet aliquid sidus; ingenti minax
stat ore et ignes efflat et rutila iubam cervice iactans quidquid autumnus gravis hiemsque gelido frigida spatio refert uno impetu transiliet et verni petet frangetque tauri colla.

82
HERCULES FURENS

HERCULES

Myself will I frame prayers worthy of Jupiter and me: May heaven abide in its own place, and earth and sea; may the eternal stars hold on their way unhindered; may deep peace brood upon the nations; may the harmless country's toil employ all iron, and may swords lie hid; may no raging tempest stir up the sea, no fires leap forth from angered Jove, no river, fed by winter's snows, sweep away the up-torn fields. Let poisons cease to be. Let no destructive herb swell with harmful juice. May savage and cruel tyrants rule no more. If earth is still to produce any wickedness, let her make haste, and if she is preparing any monster, let it be mine.¹

[The madness planned by Juno begins to come upon him.]

939 But what is this? Shadows have begirt mid-day. Phoebus fares with darkened face though there be no cloud. Who puts the day to flight and drives it back to dawn? Whence does an unfamiliar night rear its black head? Whence do so many stars fill the sky though it is day? See where the lion, my first toil, glows in no small part of heaven, is all hot with rage, and makes ready his fangs. Forthwith he will seize some star; threatening he stands with gaping jaws, and breathes forth fires, and shakes the mane upon his flaming neck; whatever stars sickly autumn and cold winter with its frozen tracts bring back, with one bound will he o'erleap, and attack and crush the neck of the vernal Bull.

¹ i.e. to destroy, as he had destroyed so many other earth-born monsters.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

AMPHITRYON

Quod subitum hoc malum est?
quo, nate, vultus huc et hinc acres referis
acieque falsum turbida caelum vides?

HERCULES

Perdomita tellus, tumida cesserunt freta, infera nostros regna sensere impetus;
immune caelum est, dignus Alcide labor.
in alta mundi spatia sublimis ferar,
petatur aether; astra promittit pater.
quid, si negaret? non capit terra Herculem 960 tandumque superis reddit. en ultro vocat
omnis deorum coetus et laxat fores, una vetante. recipis et reseras polum?
an contumacis ianuam mundi traho?
dubitatur etiam? vincla Saturno exuam contraque patris impii regnum impotens avum resolvam; bella Titanes parent, me duce furentes; saxa cum silvis feram
rapiamque dextra plena Centauris iuga.
iam monte gemino limitem ad superos agam;
970
videat sub Ossa Pelion Chiron suum, in caelum Olympus tertio positus gradu
perveniet aut mittetur.

AMPHITRYON

Infaundos procul
averte sensus; pectoris sani parum
magni tamen compesce dementem impetum.

\[\text{i.e. Jove has promised to deify his son. This is one of the chief themes in } Hercules Octaeus.\]
HERCULES FURENS

AMPHITRYON

What sudden ill is this? Why, my son, dost turn thy keen eyes now here, now there, and look upon an unreal sky with troubled gaze?

HERCULES

The earth has been subdued, the swollen seas are at rest, the infernal realms have felt my onset; heaven is as yet untried, a task worthy of Alcides. To the lofty regions of the universe on high let me make my way, let me seek the skies; the stars are my father's promise. And what if he should not keep his word? Earth has not room for Hercules, and at length restores him unto heaven. See, the whole company of the gods of their own will summons me, and opens wide the door of heaven, with one alone forbidding. And wilt thou unbar the sky and take me in? Or shall I carry off the doors of stubborn heaven? Dost even doubt my power? I'll free Saturn from his bonds, and against my unfilial father's lawless sway I'll loose my grandsire. Let the Titans prepare war, with me to lead their rage; rocks, woods and all, will I bring, and with my right hand I'll snatch up ridges full of Centaurs. Now with twin mountains I'll construct a pathway to the realms above; Chiron shall see his own Pelion 'neath Ossa, and Olympus, set as third in order, shall reach clean to heaven—or else I'll hurl it there!

AMPHITRYON

Have done with these horrible imaginings! Repress the mad fury of thy proud heart, no longer sane.

2 Jove with his two brothers had driven their father, Saturn, from the throne.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

HERCVLES

Quid hoc? Gigantes arma pestiferi movent, profugit umbras Tityos ac lacerum gerens et inane pectus quam prope a caelo stetit. labat Cithaeron, alta Pellene tremit marcentque ¹ Tempe. rapuit hic Pindi iuga, hic rapuit Oeten, saevit horrendum Mimans. flammifera Erinys verbere excusso sonat rogisque adustas propius ac propius sudes in ora tendit. saeva Tisiphone, caput serpentibus vallata, post raptum canem portam vacantem clausit opposita face.—

Sed ecce proles regis inimici latet, Lyci nefandum semen; invisio patri haec dextra iam vos reddet. excutiat leves nervus sagittas—tela sic mitti decet Herculea.

AMPHITRYON

Quo se caecus impegit furor?
vastum coactis flexit arcum cornibus pharetramque solvit, stridet emissa impetu harundo—medio spiculum collo fugit vulnere relictō.

HERCVLES

Ceteram prolem eruam
omnesque latebras. quid moror? maius mihi

¹ So Richter, with A: Leo, with E, Macetum.
HERCULES FURENS

HERCULES

What's this? The baleful Giants are taking arms. Tityos has escaped the shades and, with breast all torn and empty, has almost reached the sky. Cithaeron is tottering, lofty Pellene quakes, and Tempe's beauty fades. Here one Giant has seized Pindus' peak, there one has seized Oete, while horribly Mimas rages. Fiery Erinys cracks her brandished scourge, and closer, closer yet, holds out before my face brands burnt on funeral pyres. Cruel Tisiphone, her head with snakes encircled, since the dog was stolen away has blocked the empty gate with her outstretched torch.

[He catches sight of his children.]

But look! here lurk the children of the king, my enemy, the abominable spawn of Lycus; to your detested father this hand forthwith shall send you. Let my bowstring discharge swift arrows—so it is meet that the shafts of Hercules should fly.

AMPHITRYON

To what deed is his blind fury driven? He has bent his huge bow, the tips drawn close together; he has opened his quiver; shrilly sings the shaft, discharged with force—it has struck the neck full in the middle and sped out past the wound.

HERCULES

The rest of the brood will I rout out and all their hiding-places. Why delay? A greater
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE
bellum Mycenis restat, ut Cyclopia eversa manibus saxa nostris concidant.

Huc eat et illuc valva deiecto obice
rumpatque postes; culmen impulsum labet.
perlucet omnis regia; hic video abditum
natum scelesti patris.

AMPHITRYON
En blandas manus
ad genna tendens voce miseranda rogat—
sceclus nefandum, triste et aspectu horridum!
dextra precantem rapuit et circa furens bis ter rotatum misit; ast illi caput sonuit, cerebro tecta disperso madent.
at misera, parvum protegens natum sinu,
Megara furenti similis e latebris fugit.

HERCULES
Licet tonantis profuga condaris sinu,
petet undecumque temet haec dextra et feret.

AMPHITRYON
Quo, misera, pergis? quam fugam aut latebram petis?
struggle awaits me at Mycenae, that there, by these hands overthrown, the Cyclopean rocks may fall.

[He begins to tear at the doors of the shrine in which his remaining sons have taken refuge.]

999 Let the doors fly, one here, one there, the barriers cast down and burst the posts asunder; let the smitten roof reel. The whole palace is alight; I see hiding there the son of a cursed sire.

[He seizes the child and drags him from the scene.]

AMPHITRYON

[Standing where he can see what is going on within the palace.]

See, how he stretches out coaxing hands to his father's knees, and with piteous voice begs—oh, impious crime, grim and horrid sight! With his right hand he has caught the pleading child, and, madly whirling him again and yet again, has hurled him; his head crashed loudly against the stones; the room is drenched with scattered brains. But Megara, poor woman, sheltering her little son within her bosom, flees like a mad creature from her hiding-place.

HERCULES

[Behind the scene to Megara, also behind the scene.]

Though thou run and hide in the Thunderer's bosom, everywhence shall this hand seek thee and hale thee forth.

AMPHITRYON [to MEGARA]

Whither dost thou flee, poor child? What flight or what hiding-place dost thou seek? There is no nullus salutis Hercule infesto est locus.
amplectere ipsum potius et blanda prece
lenire tempta.

M E G A R A

Parce iam, coniunx, precor, agnosce Megaram. natus hic vultus tuos habitusque reddit; cernis, ut tendat manus?

H E R C U L E S

Teneo novercam. sequere, da poenas mihi
iugoque pressum libera turpi Iovem;
sed ante matrem parvulum hoc monstrum
occidat.

M E G A R A

Quo tendis amens? sanguinem fundes tuum?

A M P H I T H R Y O N

Pavsefactus infans igneo vultu patris
perit ante vulnus, spiritum cripuit timor
in coniugem nunc clava libratur gravis—perfregit ossa, corpori trunco caput abest nec usquam est.

Cernere hoc audes, nimis
vivax senectus? si piget luctus, habes mortem paratam; pectus in tela indue, vel stipitem istuc caede nostrorum inlitum converte. falsum ac nomini turpem tuo remove parentem, ne tuae laudi obstrepat.

90
HERCULES FURENS

place safe from Hercules enraged. Embrace him, rather, and essay to calm him with soothing prayers.

THE VOICE OF MEGARA

Husband, spare me now, I beg. See, I am Megara. This is thy son, with thine own looks and bearing. See, how he stretches out his hands.

THE VOICE OF HERCULES

I have caught my stepdame. Come, pay me thy debt, and free o’ermastered Jove from a degrading yoke. But before the mother let this little monster perish.

THE VOICE OF MEGARA

What wouldst thou, madman? Thine own blood wilt thou shed?

AMPHITRYON

Stricken with terror of his sire’s blazing eyes, the child died ere he felt the blow; fear snatched his life away. Against his wife now he poises his heavy club—her bones are crushed, her head is gone from her mangled body, gone utterly.

1026 [To himself:] Darest thou abide this sight, O too stubborn age? If thou art weary of grief, death thou hast ready; expose thy breast to those shafts, or turn against it that club smeared with our children’s gore. [Calling to Hercules.] Make away with thy pretended sire, this blot upon thy name, lest he make discord midst thy praise.

1 He imagines that Megara is Juno, and now he will pay off old scores both in his own and Jove’s interests.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

CHORVS

Quo te ipse, senior, obvium morti ingeris?
quo pergis amens? profuge et obtectus late unumque manibus aufer Herculeis scelus.

HERCVLES

Bene habet, pudendi regis excisa est domus.
tibi hunc dicatum, maximi coniunx Iovis, gregem cecidi; vota persolvi libens
te digna, et Argos victimas alias dabit.

AMPHITRYON

Nondum litasti, nate; consumma sacrum.
stat ecce ad aras hostia, expectat manum
cervice prona. præbeo occurro insequor;
macta—quid hoc est? errat acies luminum
visusque marcor hebetat; an video Herculis manus trementes? vultus in somnum cadit et fessa cervix capite summisso labat;
flexo genu iam totus ad terram ruit,
ut caesa silvis ornis aut portum mari datura moles.

Vivis an leto dedit
idem tuos qui misit ad mortem furor?

92
HERCULES FURENS

CHORUS

Why, old man, dost wantonly challenge death? Whither wouldst go, senseless? Flee and securely hide thee, and save the hands of Hercules from the one crime left.

[Re-enter Hercules.]

HERCULES

'Tis well; the shameless king's house is utterly destroyed. To thee, wife of almighty Jove, have I slaughtered this devoted flock; vows worthy of thee have I paid right joyfully, and Argos shall give still other victims.

AMPHITRYON

Not yet hast thou made full atonement, son; complete the sacrifice. See, a victim stands before the altar; with bent neck he awaits the stroke. I offer myself to death, I run to meet it, I follow after it; smile—but what is this? The glance of his eyes wanders, and faintness dulls his vision. Do I see the hands of Hercules a-tremble? His eyelids fall in slumber, and his tired neck sinks beneath his drooping head; now his knees give way and his whole body goes crashing to the ground, like an ash-tree felled in the woods, or a falling mass of rock that will give a breakwater to the sea.

[To Hercules.]

1048 Livest thou still, or has that same madness given thee to death which sent thy kindred to their doom?

[He examines the prostrate body.]

1 Eurystheus was lord of Argos.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

sopor est; reciprocos spiritus motus agit. 1050
detur quieti tempus, ut somno gravi vis victa morbi pectus oppressum levet.
removete, famuli, tela, ne repetat furens.

CHORVS

Lugeat aether magnusque parens aetheris alti tellusque ferax et vaga ponti mobilis unda, tuque ante omnes qui per terras tractusque maris fundis radios
noctemque fugas ore decoro, fervide Titan; obitus pariter tecum Alcides vidit et ortus novitque tuas utrasque domos.

Solvite tantis animum monstris, solvite superi, caecam in melius
flectite mentem. tuque, o domitor Somne malorum, requies animi,
pars humanae melior vitae,
volucre o matris genus Astraeae,
frater durae languide Mortis,
veris miscens falsa, futuri
certus et idem pessimus auctor,
pax errorum, portus vitae,
lucis requies noctisque comes,
qui par regi famuloque venis,
pavidum leti genus humanum
cogis longam discere noctem—placidus fessum lenisque fove, preme devinctum torpore gravi;
sopor indomitos alliget artus
nec torva prius pectora linquat, quam mens repetat pristina cursum.
HERCULES FURENS

He sleeps; his chest heaves with measured breathing. Let him have time for rest, that deep slumber may break the force of his madness and relieve his troubled heart. Ye slaves, remove his weapons, lest in rage he seek them yet again.

CHORUS

Let heaven mourn, and the great father of high heaven, and fertile earth, and wandering waves of the restless main; and thou above all, who over the lands and stretches of the sea dost shed thy rays, and dispellest night with comely face, O glowing Sun; equally with thee hath Alcides seen the lands of thy setting and thy rising, and hath known both thy dwellings.

1063 O free his soul from such monstrous ills, free him, ye gods, and turn to better things his darkened spirit. And do thou, O Sleep, vanquisher of woes, rest of the soul, the better part of human life, thou winged son of thy mother Astraea, sluggish brother of cruel Death, thou who dost mingle false with true, sure yet gloomy guide 1 to what shall be; O thou, who art peace after wanderings, haven of life, day's respite and night's comrade, who comest alike to king and slave, who dost compel the human race, trembling at death, to prepare for unending night—sweetly and gently soothe his weary spirit; hold him fast bound in heavy stupor; let slumber chain his untamed limbs, and leave not his savage breast until his former mind regain its course.

1 Perhaps because dreams are generally of evil.
En fusus humi saeva feroci
corde volutat somnia; nondum est
tanti pestis superata mali;
clavaeque gravi lassum solitus
mandare caput quaerit vacua pondera dextra, motu iactans brachia vano. nec adhuc omnes expulit aestus, sed ut ingenti vexata noto servat longos unda tumultus et iam vento cessante tumult 1 * * pelle insanos fluctus animi, redeat pietas virtusque viro. vel sit potius mens vesano concita motu;
error caecus qua coepit eat;
solus te iam praestare potest furor insontem. proxima puris
sors est manibus nescire nefas.

Nunc Herculeis percussa sonent pectora palmis, mundum solitos ferre lacertos verbera pulsant victrice manu; gemitus vastos audiat aether, audiat atri regina poli vastisque ferox qui colla gerit vincita catenis
imo latitans Cerberus antro;
resonet maesto clamore chaos
latique patensunda profundi et qui medius tua tela tamen senserat aer; 2
pectora tantis obsessa malis

1 Leo recognizes a lacuna here with Withof, and suggests the completion of the sentence thus: sic pristina adhuc quatit ira virum.
2 et qui . . . aer, deleted by B. Schmidt, followed by Leo.
See, prone on the ground, he revolves in his fierce heart his savage dreams; not yet has the baleful power of so great woe been overcome; wont to recline his weary head on his heavy club, he feels for its ponderous trunk with empty hand, tossing his arms in fruitless movement. Not yet has he dispelled all his surging madness, but as the waves, stirred up by a mighty wind, still keep their long, tumultuous roll, and still are swollen though the wind has ceased, [so does his former rage still rack the hero.] Banish the mad passions of thy soul; let the hero's piety and manly courage come again. Or rather, let his mind still be stirred by uncontrolled emotion; let his blind error go on the way it has begun; madness alone can now make thee innocent. Next best to guiltless hands is ignorance of guilt.

Now let Hercules' breast resound beneath the blows of his palms; let those arms that were wont to upbear the universe be smitten by his victorious hands; let the heavens hear his mighty groans, let the queen of the dark world hear, and fierce Cerberus, crouching in his lowest cave, his necks still bound with chains; let Chaos re-echo the outcries of his grief, and the spreading waves of the broad deep, and mid-air which no less had felt thy shafts; the breast beset by so great ills must by no light blow be

The poet wavers in his conception of the person addressed throughout this passage (1092-1121).
non sunt ictu ferienda levi,
uno planctu tria regna sonent.
et tu collo decus ac telum
suspensa diu, fortis harundo, pharetraeque graves, date saeva fero verbera tergo; caedant umeros roborar fortis stipesque potens duris laceret pectora nodis:
plangant tantos arma dolores.

Ite infaustum genus, o pueri,
noti per iter triste laboris,
non vos patriae laudis comites
ulti saevos vulnere reges, non Argiva membra palaestra flectere docti fortis caestu fortesque manu nondumque ferae terga iubatae iam tamen ausi telum Scythicis leve corytis missum certa librare manu tutosque fuga figere cervos—
ite ad Stygios, umbrae, portus
ite, innocuae, quas in primo limine vitae seelae scelus oppressit patriusque furor;
ite, iratos visite reges.

HERCULES

Quis hic locus, quae regio, quae mundi plaga?
ubi sum? sub ortu solis, an sub cardine glacialis ursae? numquid Hesperii maris extrema tellus hunc dat Oceano modum?

1 laceret Leo: oneret MSS.
2 Leo assumes a lacuna here which he supplies with the line vulnere gaesi frangere torti.
HERCULES FURENS

smitten; with one lamentation three kingdoms must resound. And thou, brave reed, which hung so long as ornament and weapon from his neck, and thou, heavy quiver, lay savage blows on his untamed back; let the stout oak club mangle his strong shoulders and with its hard knots bruise his breast; let his weapons make lament for his mighty woes.

Go ye, ill-fated brood, ye boys, along the gloomy way of your father's famous task, not destined to be partakers of his praise by taking bloody vengeance on savage kings; never taught in Argive wrestling school to ply the limbs, brave with boxing-glove and brave with hand, never yet taught to wound the maned lion with well-hurled javelin, but yet already bold to poise and throw with steady hand the slender Scythian dart, and shoot the deer that seek safety in flight—go to the haven of the Styx, go, harmless shades whom on the very threshold of life your sire's mad crime o'ercame; go, go to the presence of the angered kings.\(^1\)

HERCULES

[Waking up in his right mind.]

What place is this? What region, what quarter of the world? Where am I? Beneath the sun's rising or beneath the wheeling course of the frozen Bear? Is this the boundary set to Ocean's stream by that farthest land on the western sea? What air

\(^1\) i.e. the lords of death, angry because Hercules had defied them.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

quas trahimus auras? quod solum fesso subest? certe redimus—

Quod cerno nefas?

nati cruenta caede confecti iacent, perempta coniunx. quis Lycus regnum obtinet? quis tanta Thebis scelera moliri ausus est? Hercule reverso? quisquis Ismeni loca, Actaea quisquis arva, qui gemino mari pulsata Pelopis regna Dardanii colis, succurre, saevae cladis auctorem indica. ruat ira in omnes; hostis est quisquis mihi non monstrat hostem. victor Alcidae, lates?

1 Leo deletes this line.
HERCULES FURENS

is this I breathe? What soil lies beneath my weary frame? Surely I have returned to earth—

[His eyes fall on his murdered children.]

1143 How is it that I see bloody corpses lying before my house? Is my mind not yet free from infernal phantoms? Even after my return do troops of ghastly things still throng before my eyes? With shame I confess it—I am afraid; something, some great calamity my heart forebodes. Where art thou, father? Where is my wife, so proud of her brood of sons? Why is my left shoulder bare of the lion's spoil? Whither has it gone, that shield of mine, at once a soft couch, too, for the sleep of Hercules? Where are my shafts? my bow? Who has been able to steal away my arms while I still live? Who has gained so great spoils of me, and has not shuddered at even a sleeping Hercules? Glad would I be to see my conqueror, glad. Come forth, thou brave hero, whom my sire, leaving heaven, has begotten, a later son, at whose begetting night stood still, longer than at mine—

[He recognizes his dead wife and children.]

1159 What horror do I see? My sons, with bloody murder destroyed, lie here, my wife lies slain. What Lycus holds sway now? Who has dared perpetrate such outrages in Thebes, though Hercules has returned? Whoever dwellest by Ismenus' stream, on Attic plains, in the kingdom of Dardanian Pelops, lapped by two seas, come to my aid, tell me the doer of this cruel murder. On all let mine anger sweep; my foeman is he who points not out the foe. Vauquisher of Alcides, hidest thou? Come
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

procede, seu tu vindicas currus truces
Thracis cruenti sive Geryonae pecus Libyaevae dominos, nulla pugnandi mora est.
en nudus asto, vel meis armis licet
petas inermem.

Cur meos Theseus fugit
paterque vultus? ora cur condunt sua?
differte fletus; quis meos dederit neci
omnes simul, profare—quid, genitor, siles?
at tu ede, Thescu, sed tua, Theseu, fide.
uterque tacitus ora pudibunda obtegit furtimque lacrimas fundit. in tantis malis quid est pudendum? numquid Argivae impotentens dominator urbis, numquid infestum Lyci pereuntis agmen clade nos tanta obruit?
per te meorum facinorum laudem precor, genitor, tuique nominis semper mihi
numen secundum, fare. quis fudit domum?
cui praeda iacui?

AMPHITRYON

Tacita sic abeant mala.

HERCULES

Vt inultus ego sim?

AMPHITRYON

Saepe vindicta obsuit.
HERCULES FURENS

out; whether thou dost seek vengeance for the savage horses of the bloody Thracian,\(^1\) or for Geryon's flock, or the Libyan heroes,\(^2\) I am ready for the fray. Here I stand defenceless, e'en though with my own arms thou shouldst assail me armourless.

1173 Why does Theseus avoid my eyes, why does my father? Why do they hide their faces? Postpone your tears. Who has given my loved ones to death, all of them at once, tell me—why, father, art thou silent? But do thou tell, Theseus! Nay, Theseus, tell me by thy loyalty!—They both in silence turn away and hide their faces as if in shame, while tears steal down their cheeks. In woes so great what room is there for shame? Has the ruthless lord \(^3\) of Argos, has the hostile band of dying Lycus, in ruin so vast overwhelmed me? O father, by the glory of my deeds, I pray thee, and by thy sacred name \(^4\) always next \(^5\) hallowed in my sight, speak out! who has overthrown my house? To whom have I fallen prey?

AMPHITRYON

In silence, as they may, let troubles pass.

HERCULES

And I be unavenged?

AMPHITRYON

Oft vengeance has brought bane.

---

1 Diomedes.
2 e.g. Antaeus, Busiris.
3 Eurystheus.
4 i.e. of father.
5 i.e. next to that of Jove, real father of Hercules. The play on the words nomen and numen cannot be reproduced in English.
SENCAE TRAGOEDIAE

HERCVLES
Quisquamne segnis tanta toleravit mala?

AMPHITRYON
Maiora quisquis timuit.

HERCVLES
His etiam, pater,
quicquam timeri maius aut gravius potest?

AMPHITRYON
Cladis tuae pars ista quam nosti quota est'

HERCVLES
Miserere, genitor, supplices tendo manus.
quid hoc? manus refugit—hic errat scelus.
unde hic cruor? quid illa puerili madens harundo leto? tincta Lernaea est nece—
iam tela video nostra. non quacro manum.
quis potuit arcum flectere aut quae dextera
sinuare nervum vix recedentem mihi?
ad vos revertor; genitor, hoc nostrum est scelus?
tacuere—nostrum est.

AMPHITRYON
Luctus est istie tuus, crimen novercae. casus hic culpa caret.

HERCVLES
Nunc parte ab omni, genitor, iratus tono
oblite nostri vindica sera manu
HERCULES FURENS

HERCULES

Has any e’er borne such woes supinely?

AMPHITRYON

Yes, he who greater woes has feared.

HERCULES

But than these, father, can aught still greater or heavier be feared?

AMPHITRYON

How small the part of thy calamity is that thou knowest!

HERCULES

Have pity, father; see, I stretch out suppliant hands. What? from my hands he started back—here lurks the sin. Whence this blood? What of that shaft, still dripping with the blood of boys? It has been dipped in Hydra’s gore—ah, now my own weapons do I recognize. No need to ask the hand that used them! Who could have bent the bow or what hand drawn the string which scarce yields to me? I turn to you again; father, is this my deed? Silent still—’tis mine.

AMPHITRYON

Truly the woe is thine; the crime thy step-dame’s. This mischance is free from sin.

HERCULES

Now from every quarter of the sky, O father, thunder in thy wrath; though thou hast forgotten
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

saltem nepotes. stelliger mundus sonet flammasque et hic et ille iaculetur polus;
rupes ligatum Caspiae corpus trahunt
atque ales avida—cur Promethei vacant scopuli? se vacat cur vertice immenso feras volucresque pascens Caucasi abruptum latus
nudumque silvis? illa quae pontum Scythen Symplegas artat hinc et hinc vinctas manus distendat alto, sumque revocata vice in se coibunt saxaque in caelum expriment actis utrimque rupibus medium mare, ego inquieta montium iaceam mora.
quin structum acervans nemore congesto aggerem crue corpus impio sparsum cremo?
sic, sic agendum est—inferis reddam Hereulem.

AMPHITRYON

Nondum tumultu pectus attonito carens
mutavit iras quodque habet proprium furor,
in se ipse saevit.

HERCYLES

Dira Furiarum loca
et inferorum carcer et sonti plaga decreta turbae, si quod exilium latet ulterior Erebo, Cerbero ignotum et mihi, hoc me abde, tellus; Tartari ad finem ultimum
mansurus ibo. pectus o nimium ferum!
quies vos per omnem, liberi, sparsos domum
deflere digne poterit? hic durus malis

106
me, with tardy hand at least avenge thy grandsons. Let the starry heavens resound, and the skies dart lightnings from pole to pole; let the Caspian crags claim my fettered body, and let the ravenous bird—Why are Prometheus' crags unoccupied? Why, the bare, steep side of Caucasus which, on its lofty summit, feeds beasts and birds of prey? Let those clashing rocks which confine the Scythian sea stretch my fettered hands apart this way and that o'er the deep, and, when with recurrent change they come together and when, as the crags rush from either side, the rocks force up to heaven the interposing flood, may I lie there the mountains' tortured curb. Nay, I will build me a huge pile of logs and burn my body spattered with impious gore. Thus, thus must I do—to the nether gods will I give back Hercules.

AMPHITRYON

His heart, not yet eased of frenzy's tumult, has shifted its wrath's aim and now, sure sign of madness, he rages against himself.

HERCULES

Ye dire abodes of fiends, prison-house of the dead, ye regions set apart for the guilty throng, if any place of banishment lies hidden away beneath hell itself, unknown to Cerberus and me, hide me there, O earth; to the remotest bounds of Tartarus will I go and there abide. O heart too fierce! Who can weep worthily for you, my children, scattered through all my house? This face, hardened with

1 To which Prometheus had been bound, and from which Hercules released him.
2 The Symplegades. See Index.
lacrimare vultus nescit.

Tibi tela frangam nostra, tibi nostros, puer, rumpemus arcus; at tuis stipes gravis
ardebit umbris; ipsa Lernaeis frequens pharetra telis in tuos ibit rogos.
dent arma poenas. vos quoque infaustas meis
cremabo telis, o novercales manus.

AMPHITRYON

Quis nomen usquam seeleris errori addidit?

HERCVLES

Saepe error ingens seeleris obtinuit locum.

AMPHITRYON

Nunc Hercule opus est; perfer hanc molem malii.

HERCVLES

Non sie furore cessit extinctus pudor,

populos ut omnes impio aspectu fugem.
arma, arma, Theseu, flagito propere mihi subtracta reddi. sana si mens est mihi, referte manibus tela; si remanet furor,
pater, recede; mortis inveniam viam.

AMPHITRYON

Per sancta generis sacra, per ius nominis

utrumque nostri, sive me altorem vocas
HERCULES FURENS

woe, has forgotten how to weep. Give my bow here, give me my arrows, here give me my huge club.

[He bends over the corpses and addresses each in turn.]

For thee will I break my shafts, for thee, poor boy, will I rend my bow; but to thy shades my heavy club shall burn; my quiver itself, full of Lerna's darts, shall go with thee to thy pyre. So let my arms pay the penalty. You, too, with my weapons will I burn, O cursed, O stepdame's hands.

AMPHITRYON

What man anywhere hath laid on error the name of guilt?

HERCULES

Oft hath great error held the place of guilt.

AMPHITRYON

Now must thou be Hercules; bear thou this weight of trouble.

HERCULES

Shame, quenched by madness, has not so far gone from me that with unhallowed presence I should scare all peoples. Arms, Theseus, my arms! I pray you quickly give back what you have stolen. If my mind is sane, give back to my hands their weapons; if madness still remains, fly, O my father; I shall find a path to death.

AMPHITRYON

By the holy ties of birth, by the right of both my names, whether thou dost call me foster-father
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

seu tu parentem, perque venerandos piis canos, senectae parce desertae, precor, annisque fessis; unicum lapsae domus firmamen, unum lumen afflicto malis temet reserva. nullus ex te contigit fructus laborum; semper aut dubium mare aut monsstra timui; quisquis in toto furit rex saevus orbe, manibus aut aris nocens, a me timetur; semper absentis pater fructum tui tactumque et aspectum peto.

HERCVLES

Cur animam in ista luce detineam amplius morcerque nil est; cuncta iam amisi bona: mentem arma famam coniugem natos manus, etiam furorem! nemo polluto quacat animo mederi; morte sanandum est scelus.

AMPHITRYON

Perimes parentem.

HERCVLES

Facere ne possim, occidam.

AMPHITRYON

Genitore coram?

HERCVLES

Cernere hunc docui nefas.

AMPHITRYON

Memoranda potius omnibus facta intuens unius a te criminis veniam pete.
HERCULES FURENS

or true sire, by these grey hairs, which pious sons revere, spare thyself, I pray, to my lonely age and to my weary years. Sole prop of my fallen house, sole light of my woe-darkened life, save thyself for me. No enjoyment of thee, no fruit of thy toils has fallen to my lot; but always have I had to fear either the stormy seas or monsters; every cruel king that rages in all the world with guilt on his hands or altars is cause of dread to me; always do I, thy father, yearn for the joy of touch and sight of thee, my ever-absent son.

HERCULES

Why I should longer stay my soul in the light of day, and linger here, there is no cause; all that was dear to me I've lost: reason, arms, honour, wife, children, strength—and madness too! No power could purge a tainted spirit; by death must sin be healed.

AMPHITRYON

Thou'lt slay thy father.

HERCULES

Lest I do so, I'll die.

AMPHITRYON

Before thy father's eyes?

HERCULES

I have taught him to look on impious deeds.

AMPHITRYON

Nay, rather think upon thy deeds glorious to all, and seek from thyself pardon for one sin.

111
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

HERCULES

Veniam dabit sibi ipse, qui nulli dedit? laudanda feci iussus; hoc unum meum est succurre, genitor; sive te pietas movet seu triste fatum sive violatum decus virtutis. effer arma; vincatur mea fortuna dextra.

THESEVS

Sunt quidem patriae preces satis efficaces, sed tamen nostro quoque movere fletu. surge et adversa impetu perfringe solito. nunc tuum nulli imparem animum malo resume, nunc magna tibi virtute agendum est: Herculem irasci veta

HERCULES

Si vivo, feci scelera; si morior, tuli. purgare terras propero. iamdudum mihi monstrum impium saevumque et immite ac serum oberrat; agedum dextra, conare aggregi ingens opus, labore bis seno amplius. ignava cessas, fortis in pueros modo pavidasque matres? arma nisi dantur mihi, aut omne Pindi Thracis excidam nemus Bacchique lucos et Cithaeronis iuga mecum cremabo, aut tota cum domibus suis dominisque tecta, cum deis templas omnibus Thebana supra corpus excipiam meum atque urbe versa condar, et, si fortibus leve pondus umeris moenia immissa incident
HERCULES FURENS

HERCULES

Shall he give remission to himself who to none other gave it? As for my glorious deeds, at others' hest I did them; this alone is mine. Help me, father; whether love move thee, or my sad fate, or the tarnished glory of my manhood. Bring me my weapons; by my right hand let fate be vanquished.

THESEUS

Enough thy father's prayers have power to move, but let my weeping move thee, too. Up! and with thy wonted force break through adversity. Now get back thy courage which was ne'er unequal to any hardship; now must thou greatly play the man— forbid Hercules to rage!

HERCULES

If I keep to life, I have wrought wrong; if I die, have borne it. I am in haste to purge the earth. Long since a monstrous form, impious, savage, inexorable, wild, has stalked before my eyes; come, hand, grapple with this task greater than the last of all thy labours. Coward, dost thou shrink, brave against boys alone and trembling mothers? My arms, I say! Unless they are given me, either I will cut down all the woods of Thracian Pindus and Bacchus' groves and Cithaeron's ridges, and along with my own body I will burn them up; or else all the dwellings of Thebes with their households and their masters, the temples with all their gods, I will pull down upon myself and lie buried 'neath a city's wreck; and if, hurled on my shoulders, the walls shall fall with too light a weight, and if, buried
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

septemque opertus non satis portis premar, onus omne media parte quod mundi sedet dirimitque superos, in meum vertam caput.

AMPHITRYON

Reddo arma.

HERCVLES

Vox est digna genitore Herculis hoc en peremptus spiculo cecidit puer.

AMPHITRYON

Hoc Iuno telum manibus immisit tuis

HERCVLES

Hoc nunc ego utar.

AMPHITRYON

Ecce quam miserum metu
cor palpitat pectusque sollicitum ferit.

HERCVLES

Aptata harundo est.

AMPHITRYON

Ecce iam facies scelus
volens sciensque.

HERCVLES

Pande, quid fieri iubes?
beneath the seven gates, I be not crushed enough, then all the mass which lies at the centre of the universe and separates gods from men will I overthrow upon my head.

AMPHITRYON

I return thine arms.

HERCULES

Thy words are worthy the sire of Hercules. See, slain by this shaft fell my boy.

AMPHITRYON

'Twas Juno shot the arrow by thy hand.

HERCULES

'Tis I who shall use it now.

AMPHITRYON

Oh, how my woeful heart trembles with fear and smites on my anxious breast!

HERCULES

The shaft is notched.

AMPHITRYON

Ah, now wilt thou sin of thine own will and knowledge.

HERCULES

Speak out; what wouldst have me do?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

AMPHITRYON

Nihil rogamus; noster in tuto est dolor—
natum potes servare tu solus mihi, cripere nec tu. maximum evasi metum;
miserum haut potes me facere, felicem potes.
sic statute, quidquid statuis, et causam tuam
famamque in arto stare et ancipiti scias;
aut vivis aut occidis. hanc animam levem fessamque senio nec minus fessam malis
in ore primo teneo. tam tarde patri vitam dat aliquis? non feram ulterior moram, letale ferro pectus impresso¹ induam;
hic, hic iacebit Hereulis sani seclus.

HERCVLES

Iam parce, genitor, parce, iam revoca manum.
succumbe, virtus, perfer imperium patris.
eat ad labores hic quoque Herculeos labor:
vivamus. artus alleva afflictos solo, Theseu, parentis. dextra contactus pios
secelerata refugit.

AMPHITRYON

Hanc manum amplector libens, hac nisus ibo, pectori hanc aegro admovens pellam dolores.

HERCVLES

Quem locum profugus petam?
ubi me recondam quave tellure obruar?
quis Tanais aut quis Nilus aut quis Persica
violentus unda Tigris aut Rhenus ferox

¹ impressum A: Richter laetare! ferro pectus impresso
induam.
HERCULES FURENS

AMPHITRYON

I make no prayer; for me woe is assured—thou alone canst preserve my son to me, but not even thou canst snatch him from me. I have passed my greatest fear; wretched thou canst not make me, but blest, thou canst. Decide, then, as thou wilt decide, but know that in so doing thy cause and fame stand at hazard and doubtful issue; either thou livest or slayest me. This flitting soul, weary with age and no less with woe weary, I hold upon my very lips. So grudgingly does any man grant his father life? [Heseizesaswordandsetzsitspointtohisbreast.] I will brook no more delay; with the fatal steel thrust home will I pierce my breast; here, here shall lie the crime of a sane Hercules!

HERCULES

Now hold, father, hold, recall thy hand! Strong soul of mine, yield, do a father's will; add this task also to Hercules' toils—and live! Theseus, lift thou from the ground my father's fainting limbs. My hands defiled shrink from that pious touch.

AMPHITRYON

But this hand I clasp joyfully; by its help I'll walk and, holding it close to my aching heart, banish my griefs.

HERCULES

Whither shall I flee? Where shall I hide me, or in what land bury me? What Tanaïs, what Nile, what Tigris, raging with Persian torrents, what war-like Rhine, or Tagus, turbid with the golden sands
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Tagusve Hibera turbidus gaza fluens
abluere dextram poterit? arctoum licet Maeotis in me gelida transfundat mare et tota Tethys per meas currat manus, haerebit altum facinus. in quas impius
terras recedes? ortum an occasum petes?
ubique notus peridi exilio locum.
me refugit orbis, astra transversos agunt
obliqua cursus, ipse Titan Cerberum meliore vultu vidit. o fidum caput, Theseu, latebrom quaere longinquam abditam;
quoniamque semper sceleris alieni arbiter amas nocentes, gratiam meritis refer vicemque nostris. redde me infernus precor umbvis reductum, meque subiectum tuis substitue vincis; ille me abscondet locus—sed et ille novit.

THESEVS

Nostra te tellus manet.
illie solutam caede Gradivus manum
restituit armis: illa te, Aleide, vocat, facere innocentes terra quae superos solet.
HERCULES FURENS

of Spain, can cleanse this hand? Though cold Maeotis should pour its northern sea upon me, though the whole ocean should stream along my hands, still will the deep stains cling. To what countries, man of sin, wilt thou betake thee? The rising or the setting sun wilt seek? Known in every land, I have lost place for exile. The world shrinks from my presence, the stars, moving askance, turn away their courses; Titan himself looked upon Cerberus with kindlier face. O faithful friend, Theseus, seek a hiding-place for me, remote, obscure; since, though witness of others' sins, thou dost ever love the sinners, grant me now grace and recompense for favours past. Take me back, I pray thee, and restore me to the nether shades; put me in thy stead, loaded with thy chains; that place will hide me—but it, too, knows me!

THESEUS

My land awaits thee. There Gradivus once cleansed his hands from blood ¹ and gave them back to war; thee, Alcides, does that land call, land which can free the immortals from their stains.²

¹ See Index s.v. "Mars."
² If Athens could cleanse Mars from blood-guiltiness, she could do the same for Hercules.
DRAMATIS PERSONAE

1) Agamemnon, king of the Greek forces in the war against Troy.
2) Pyrrhus, son of Achilles, one of the active leaders in the final events of the war.
3) Ulysses, king of Ithaca, one of the most powerful and crafty of the Greek chiefs before Troy.
4) Calchas, a priest and prophet among the Greeks.
5) Talthybius, a Greek messenger.
6) An Old Man, faithful to Andromache.
7) Astyanax, little son of Hector and Andromache.
8) Hecuba, widow of Priam, one of the Trojan captives.
9) Andromache, widow of Hector, a Trojan captive.
10) Helena, wife of Menelaus, king of Sparta, and afterwards of Paris, a prince of Troy; the exciting cause of the Trojan war.
11) Polyxena, daughter of Hecuba and Priam (persona muta).
12) Chorus of captive Trojan women.

The Scene is laid on the seashore, with the smouldering ruins of Troy in the background.

The Time is the day before the embarkation of the Greeks on their homeward journey.
ARGUMENT

The long and toilsome siege of Troy is done. Her stately palaces and massive walls have been overthrown and lie darkening the sky with their still smouldering ruins. Her heroic defenders are either slain or scattered, seeking other homes in distant lands. The victorious Greeks have gathered the rich spoils of Troy upon the shore, among these the Trojan women, who have suffered the usual fate of women when a city is sacked. They await the lot which shall assign them to their Grecian lords and scatter them among the cities of their foes. All things are ready for the start.

But now the ghost of Achilles has risen from the tomb, and demanded that Polyxena be sacrificed to him before the Greeks shall be allowed to sail away. And Calchas, also, bids that Astyanax be slain, for only thus can Greece be safe from any future Trojan war. And thus the Trojan captives, who have so long endured the pains of war, must suffer still this double tragedy.
TROADES

HECUBA

Quicvmque regno fidit et magna potens dominatur aula nec leves metuit deos animumque rebus credulum laetis dedit, me videat et te, Troia. non umquam tuit documenta fors maiora, quam fragili loco starent superbi. columnae eversum occidit pollentis Asiae, caelitum egregius labor; ad euius arma venit et qui frigid septena Tanain ora pandentem bibit et qui renatum primus excipiens diem tepidum rubenti Tigrin immiscet freto, et quae vagos vicina prospiciens Scythas ripam catervis Ponticam viduis ferit, excisa ferro est, Pergamum incubuit sibi, en alta muri decora congesti iacent tectis adustis; regiam flammae ambiunt omnisque late fumat Assaraci domus. non prohibit avidas flamma victoris manus, diripitur ardens Troia, nec caelum patet undante fumo; nube ceu densa obsitus ater favilla squalet Iliaca dies.

1 A: Leo quae.
3 A: Leo congestis.

2 Leo deletes et quae ... ferit.
4 A: Leo adusti.
Whoever trusts in sovereignty and strongly lords it in his princely hall, who fears not the fickle gods and has given up his trustful soul to joy, on me let him look and on thee, O Troy. Never did fortune give larger proof on how frail ground stand the proud. O'erthrown and fallen is mighty Asia's prop, famous work of gods; she to whose assistance came he who drinks chill Tanaïs, spreading its sevenfold mouths, he who first greets the new-born day, where mingle the warm waters of Tigris with the ruddy sea, and she who sees o'er her borders the wandering Scythians and with her virgin hordes scourges the Pontic shore—e'en she by the sword is razed, Pergamum upon herself has fallen. See! the towering glories of her high-piled wall lie low, her dwellings consumed by fire; the flames lick round her palace, and all the house of Assaracus smokes on every side. The flames check not the victor's greedy hands; Troy is plundered even while she burns. The very sky is hidden by billowing smoke; the face of day, obscured as by an impenetrable cloud, is black and foul with the ashes of Ilium. With wrath still

1 Troy, whose walls were built by Neptune and Apollo.
2 Rhesus.
3 Memnon.
4 Penthesilea, queen of the Amazons.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

stat avidus irae victor et lentum Ilium metitur oculis ac decem tandem ferus ignoscit annis; horret afflictam quoque, victamque quamvis videat, haut credit sibi potuisse Vinci. spolia populator rapit Dardania; praedam mille non capiunt rates.

Testor deorum numen adversum mihi, patriaque cineres teque rectorem Phrygum quem Troia toto conditum regno tegit, tuosque manes quo stetit stante Ilium, et vos, meorum liberum magni greges, umbrae minores: quidquid adversi accidit, quaecumque Phoebas ore lymphato furens credi deo vetante praedixit mala, prior Hecuba vidi gravida nec tacui metus et vana vates ante Cassandram fui.
non cautus ignes Ithacus aut Ithaci comes nocturnus in vos sparsit aut fallax Sinon. meus ignis iste est, facibus ardetis meis.

Sed quid ruinas urbis eversae gemis, vivax senectus? respice infelix ad hos luctus recentes; Troia iam vetus est malum. vidi execzandum regiae caedis nefas ipsasque ad aras (maius admissum sile) Aeacidis arma, cum ferox, scaeva manu coma reflectens regium torta caput, alto nefandum vulneri ferrum abdidit;

1 So Leo conjectures by way of emending the impossible text: maius admissumst scelus Aeacis armis.
unglutted the victor stands, eyeing long-lingering Ilium, and at last, spite of his savage hate, forgives the ten long years; he quakes even at her ruins and, though he sees her overthrown, yet trusts not his own witness that she could have been overthrown. The plunderer hurries away the Dardan spoils, booty which a thousand ships cannot contain.

28 I call to witness the divinity of the gods, hostile to me, the ashes of my country, thee,\(^1\) ruler of Phrygia, whom, buried beneath thy whole realm, Troy covers, and the shades of thee\(^2\) with whose standing Ilium stood, and you, great troops of children mine, ye lesser shades: whatever disaster has befallen us, whatever evils Phoebus' bride,\(^3\) raving with frenzied lips, foretold, though the god forbade that she should be believed, I, Hecuba, big with child,\(^4\) saw first, nor did I keep my fears unuttered, and I before Cassandra was a prophetess unheeded. 'Tis not the crafty Ithacan,\(^5\) nor the night-prowling comrade\(^6\) of the Ithacan, who has scattered firebrands 'mongst you, nor the lying Simon—mine is that fire, by my brands are you burning.

41 But why lamentest thou the downfall of a city overthrown, old age that clingest too long to life? Think thou, ill-fated, on these recent griefs; Troy's fall is now an ancient woe. I saw the accursed murder of the king and at the very altar (crime past belief) the arms of Aeacides,\(^7\) when he, with left hand clutching the old man's hair, bent back the royal head and into the deep wound savagely thrust the impious steel; and when with right good will

---

\(^1\) Priam. \(^2\) HECTOR'S. \(^3\) Cassandra.
\(^5\) Ulysses.
\(^6\) Diomedes.
\(^7\) Pyrrhus, son of Achilles, and remote descendant of Aeacus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

quod penitus actum cum recepisset libens, ensis senili siccus e iugulo redit. 50 placare quem non potuit a caede effera mortalis aevi cardinem extremum premens superique testes seeleris et quondam 1 sacrum regni iacentis? ille tot regum pares caret sepulcro Priamus et flamma indiget ardente Troia. non tamen superis sat est; dominum ecce Priami nuribus et natis legens sortitur urna praedaque en vilis sequar. hie Hectorisconiugia despondet sibi, hie optat Heleni coniugem, hie Antenoris; 60 nec dest tuos, Cassandra, qui thalamos petat. mea sors timentur, sola sum Danais metus.
Lamenta cessant? turba captivae mea, ferite palmis pectora et planctus date et iusta Troiae facite. iamdudum sonet fatalis Ide, indicis diri domus.

CHORVS

Non rude vulgus lacrimisque novum lugere inbes: hoc continuis egimus annis, ex quo tetigit Phrygius Graias hospes Amyelas 70 secuitque fretum pinus matri sacra Cybeiae. deciens nivibus cannit Ide, deciens nostris nudata rogis, et Sigeis trepidus campis decumas secuit messor aristas, ut nulla dies maerore caret.

1 So ψ: Leo quidem.
he had plucked away the deep-driven sword, it came unwetted from the old man's throat. Ah, whose rage might not have been stayed from savage slaughter by one close drawing to the last period of mortal life, by the gods who beheld the crime, and by what was once the sanctuary of a fallen realm? Priam, that father of so many princes, lies unentombed and lacks a funeral torch, though Troy is burning. And yet the gods are not satisfied; behold, the urn by lot is choosing lords for the matrons and maids of Priam's house, and I, a spoil unprized, shall follow some new lord. One promises himself the wife of Hector, one prays that Helenus' wife be his, and one, Antenor's; nor is one wanting who seeks thy couch, Cassandra; my lot is dreaded, I only am a terror to the Greeks.

63 Do your wailings falter? O throng of mine, captives as ye are, smite breasts with palms, make loud laments, due rites for Troy perform. Long since 'twere time for fatal Ida to resound, home of the ill-omened judge.1

CHORUS

No untrained company, stranger to tears, dost thou bid mourn; this have we done for years unceasing, from when the Phrygian guest2 touched at Grecian Amyclae, and the waves were cleft by the pine sacred to mother Cybele.3 Ten times has Ida whitened with her snows, ten times been stripped for our funeral pyres, and in the Sigean fields ten harvests has the trembling reaper cut, since when no day has been without its grief. But now we have

1 i.e. the pines were cut on Mount Ida, which was sacred to Cybele.
2
3
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

sed nova fletus causa ministrat.
ite ad planctus, miseramque leva,
regina, manum. vulgus dominam vile sequemur; non indociles lugere sumus.

HECVBA

Fidae casus nostri comites, solvite crinem, per colla fluent maesta capilli tepido Troiae
pulvere turpes. complete manus, hoc ex Troia sumpsisse licet.¹
paret exercitos turba lacertos;
veste remissa substringe sinuS
uterque tenus pateant artus.
cui coniugio pectora velas,
captive pudor?
cingat tunicas palla solutas,
vacet ad crebri verbera planctus
furibunda manus—placet hic habitus, placet; agnosco Troada turbam.
iterum luctus redeant veteres,
solitum flendi vincite morem;
Hectora flemus.

CHORVS

Solvimus omnes lacerum multo
funere crinem; coma demissa est libera nodo sparsitque cinis fervidus ora.
cadit ex umbris vestis apertis
imumque tegit suffulta latus;

¹ Leo follows F. Haase in transferring ll. 102b and 103 to this place.
new cause for weeping. On with your lamentation, and do thou, O queen, lift high thy wretched hand. We, the common throng, will follow our mistress; well trained in mourning are we.

HECUBA

Trusty comrades of my fate, unbind your locks; over your sorrowing shoulders let them flow, defiled with Troy’s warm dust. Fill your hands—so much may we take from Troy. Let the band their bared arms make ready; let down your robes and bind their folds; down to the waist let your forms be bared. For what husband dost veil thy breast, O captive modesty? Let your mantles gird up the loose-flowing tunics,¹ let mad hands be free for raining the blows of woe—’tis well, this attire is well; now do I recognize my Trojan band. Repeat once more your old lamentations; exceed your wonted manner of weeping; ’tis for Hector we weep.

CHORUS

We have all loosed our locks at many a funeral torn; our hair has fall’n free from its knot, and hot ashes have sprinkled our faces. From our bared shoulders our garments fall and cover only our loins with their folds. Now naked breasts invite ¹ i.e. the outer robe (palla) is to be used as a girdle with which to hold up the loose tunic, and so leave the hands free.

SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

iam nuda vocant pectora dextras;
nunc, nunc vires exprome, dolor.
Rhoetea sonent litora planctu, habitansque cavis montibus Echo
non, ut solita est, extrema brevis verba remittat, totos reddat Troiae gemitus. audiat omnis pontus et aether. saevite, manus, pulsu pectus tundite vasto,
non sum solito contenta sono;
Hectora flemus.

HECVBA

Tibi nostra ferit dextra lacertos umerosque ferit tibi sanguineos, tibi nostra caput dextra pulsat,
tibi maternis ubera palmis
laniata iacent. fluat et mullo sanguine manet quacumque tuo funere feci rupta cicatrix.
columen patriae, mora fatorum,
tu prae sidium Phrygibus fessis,
tu murus eras umerisque tuis
stetit illa decem fulta per annos;
tecum cecidit summusque dies
Hectoris idem patriaeque fuit.

Vertite planetus; Priamo vestros
fundite fletus, satis Hector habet.

CHORVS

Accipe, rector Phrygiae, planetus, accipe fletus, bis capte senex.
nil Troia semel te rege tulit,
bis pulsari Dardana Graio
TROADES

our hands; now, now, O Grief, put forth thy strength. Let the Rhoetean shores resound with our mourning, and let Echo, who dwells in the caves of the mountains, not, after her wont, curtly repeat our final words alone, but give back our full mourning for Troy. Let every sea hear us, and sky. Smite, hands, bruise breasts with mighty beating; I am not content with the accustomed sound—‘tis for Hector we weep.

HECUBA

For thee my right hand smites my arms, and bleeding shoulders it smites for thee; for thee my hand beats on my head, for thee my breasts with a mother’s palms are mangled. Let flow and stream with blood, bleeding afresh, whatever wound I made at thy funeral. O prop of thy country, hindrance of fate, thou bulwark for weary Phrygians, thou wast our country’s wall; propped on thy shoulders, ten years she stood; with thee she fell, and Hector’s last day was his country’s, too.

130 Turn now your mourning; for Priam shed your tears; Hector has enough.

CHORUS

Receive our mourning, O ruler of Phrygia; receive our tears, twice-captured old man. Naught has Troy suffered but once in thy reign; nay, twice she endured the battering of her Dardanian walls by 1 Hector.

moenia ferro bisque pharetras
passa Herculeas. post elatos Hecubae partus regumque gregem postrema pater funera cludis magnoque Iovi victima caesus Sigea premis litora truncus.

HECVBA

Alio lacrimas flectite vestras;
non est Priami miseranda mei
mors, Iliades. felix Priamus
dicite cunctae. liber manes vadit ad imos, nec feret umquam
victa Graium cervice iugum;
non ille duos videt Atridas
nec fallacem cernit Vlixen;
non Argolici praeda triumphi subiecta feret colla tropaeis;
non adsuetas ad sceptrum manus
post terga dabit currusque sequens Agamemnonios aurea dextra vincula gestans latis fiet pompa Mycenis.

CHORVS

Felix Priamus dicimus omnes.
secum excedens sua regna tuli;
nunc Elysii nemoris tutis
errat in umbris interque pias felix animas Hectora quaeuit.
felix Priamus, felix quisquis
bello moriens omnia secum consumpta tulit.

1 First, when Hercules captured Troy with the aid of Telammon during the reign of Laomedon, at which time little
TROADES

Grecian steel and twice felt the arrows of Hercules.

After Hecuba's sons were borne out to burial, after that troop of princes, thou, father, dost close the long funeral train and, slaughtered as a victim to mighty Jove, on Sigeum's strand headless thou liest.

HECUBA

Otherwhere turn ye your tears; not to be pitied is my Priam's death, ye Trojans. Cry ye all, "Happy Priam!" Free fares he to the deep land of spirits, nor ever will bear on his conquered neck the yoke of the Grecians; he does not look upon the two sons of Atreus, nor behold crafty Ulysses; he will not,
as booty of Argolic triumph, bend neck 'neath their trophies; he will not yield hands to be bound which have wielded the sceptre, nor, following the car of Agamemnon, wearing gold fetters, will he make show for wide-spreading Mycenae.

CHORUS

"Happy Priam," say we all. With him, in departing, he has taken his kingdom; now in the peaceful shades of Elysium's grove he wanders, and happy midst pious souls he seeks for his Hector.
Happy Priam, happy whoe'er, dying in battle, has
with his death made an end of all.

Priam was set on the throne; and second, when in the hands of Philoctetes they were again used against Troy.

Priam was slain near the altar of Jupiter in the central courtyard of his own palace.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

TALTHYBIVS

O longa Danais semper in portu mora, seu petere bellum, petere seu patriam volunt!

CHORVS

Quae causa ratibus faciat et Danais moram, effare, reduces quis deus claudat vias.

TALTHYBIVS

Pavet animus, artus horridus quassat tremor. maiora veris monstra vix capiunt fidem— vidi ipse, vidi. summa iam Titan iuga stringebat ortu, vicerat noctem dies, cum subito caeco terra mugitu fremens concussa totos traxit ex imo sinus; movere silvae capita et excelsum nemus fragore vasto tonuit et lucus sacer; Idaea ruptis saxa ceciderunt iugis. nec terra solum tremuit; et pontus suum adesse Achillen sensit ac stravit vada. tum scissa vallis aperit immensos specus et hiatus Erebi pervium ad superos iter tellure fracta praebet ac tumulum levat. 180 emicuit ingens umbra Thessalici ducis, Threicia qualis arma proludens tuis iam, Troia, fatis stravit aut Neptunium 136
TROADES

[Enter Talthybius.] Ex. messenger

TALTHYBIUS

O delay, ever long for Greeks in harbour, whether they would seek war or seek fatherland!

CHORUS

Tell thou what cause delays the Grecian fleet, what god blocks the homeward paths.

TALTHYBIUS

My spirit is afraid; shivering horror makes my limbs to quake. Portents transcending truth scarce gain belief—but I saw it, with my own eyes I saw. The sun was just grazing the hill-tops with his morning rays and day had vanquished night, when suddenly the earth with hidden rumblings rocked convulsive and brought to light her innermost recesses; the woods tossed their tops and the lofty forest and sacred grove resounded with huge crashing; and rocks came falling from the shivered heights of Ida. Nor did the earth only tremble; the sea, too, felt its own Achilles near and stilled its waters. Then was the valley rent asunder, revealing caverns measureless, and yawning Erebus gave passage-way through the cleft earth to the world above and opened up the tomb.\(^1\) Forth leaped the mighty shade of the Thessalian chief, such shape as when, practising for thy fate, O Troy, he laid low the Thracian\(^2\) arms, or smote the son\(^3\) of Neptune with \(^1\) i.e. the great tomb of Achilles.

\(^2\) Achilles on his way to Troy defeated Cisseus, father of Hecuba, who was leading Thracian auxiliaries to Troy.

\(^3\) See Index s.v. "Cycnus" (ii).
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

cana nitentem perculit iuvenem coma, aut cum inter acies Marte violento furens corporibus amnes clusit et quaerens iter tardus cruento Xanthus erravit vado, aut cum superbo victor in curru stetit
egitque habenas Hectorem et Troiam trahens.
implevit omne litus irati sonus:
"ite, ite inertes, manibus meis debitos auferte honores, solvite ingratas rates per nostras ituri maria. non parvo luit iras Achillis Graecia et magno luet.
desponsa nostris cineribus Polyxene Pyrrhi manu mactetur et tumulum riget."
haec fatus alta voce dimisit 1 diem repetensque Ditem mersus ingentem specum coente terra iunxit. immoti iaceit tranquilla pelagi, ventus abiecit placidumque fluctu murmurat leni mare,
Tritonum ab alto cecinit hymenaeum chorus.

PYRRHUS

Cum laeta pelago vela rediturus dares, excidit Achilles cuius unius manu
impulsa Troia, quidquid accessit 2 morae
illo remoto, dubia quo caderet stetit.
velis licet quod petitur ac properes dare,
sero es daturus; iam suum cuncti duces
tulere pretium. quae minor merces potest tantae dari virtutis? an meruit parum
qui, fugere bellum iussus et longa sedens

1 So Gronovius, with ψ: Leo alta nocte divisit: Richter alta nocte demersit.
2 So Richter: Leo adiecit, with ω.

138
TROADES

white plumes gleaming; or when, amidst the ranks raging in furious battle, he choked rivers with corpses, and Xanthus, seeking his way, wandered slowly along with bloody stream; or when he stood in his proud car victorious, plying the reins and dragging Hector—and Troy. The shout of the enraged hero filled all the shore: "Go, go, ye cowards, bear off the honours due to my spirit; loose your ungrateful ships to sail away over my seas. At no small price did Greece avert the wrath of Achilles, and at great cost shall she avert it. Let Polyxena, once pledged to me, be sacrificed to my dust by the hand of Pyrrhus and bedew my tomb." So speaking with deep voice, he bade farewell to day and, plunging down to Dis once more, closed the huge chasm as the earth was again united. The tranquil waters lie motionless, the wind has given up its threats, the calm sea murmurs with gentle waves, from the deep the band of Tritons has sounded the wedding hymn.

[Enter Pyrrhus and Agamemnon.]

PYRRHUS

When thou wast spreading joyful sails for thy return over the sea, Achilles was quite forgot, who by his sole hand made Troy to totter, so that—whate'er delay was added after his death—she but stood wavering which way to fall. Though thou shouldst wish and haste to give him what he seeks, thou wouldst give too late; already have all the chiefs made choice of their spoils. What meaner prize can be given to his great worth? Or was his desert but slight who, bidden to shun the war and idly spend a long old age, surpassing the years of the 1 Because he was the son of the sea-goddess Thetis.

aevum senecta ducere ac Pylii senis transcendere annos, exuit matris dolos falsasque vestes, fassus est armis virum?
inhospitali Telephus regno impotens,
dum Mysiae ferocis introitus negat,
rudem cruore regio dextram imbuit
fortemque eandem sensit et mitem manum.
cecidere Thebae, vidit Eetion capi
sua regna victus; clade subversa est pari apposita celso parva Lyrnesos iugo, captaque tellus nobilis Briseide et causa litis regibus Chryse iacet et nota fama Tenedos et quae pascuo secunda pingui Thracios nutrit greges Scyros fretumque Lesbos Aegacum secanus et cara Phoebo Cilla; quid quas alluit vernis Caycus gurgitem attollens aquis?

Haec tanta clades gentium ac tantus pavor, sparsae tot urbes turbinis vasti modo alterius esset gloria ac summum decus;
iter est Achillis; sic meus venit pater et tanta gessit bella, dum bellum parat.
ut alia sileam merita, non unus satis
Hector fuisset? Ilium vicit pater, vos diruistis. inclitas laudes iuvat et facta magni clara genitoris sequi.

iacuit peremptus Hector ante oculos patris patruique Memnon, cuius ob luctum parent pallente maestum protulit vultu diem;
suique victor operis exemplum horruit
didicitque Achilles et dea natos mori.
tum saeva Amazon ultimus cecidit metus.
ancient Pylian, put off his mother's wiles and those disguising garments, confessing himself a man by his choice of arms? When Telephus, unbridled ruler of inhospitable realm, refused him passage through warlike Mysia, he with his royal blood first dyed that inexperienced hand, and found that same hand brave and merciful. Thebes fell and conquered Eetion saw his kingdom taken; by a like disaster little Lyrnesos, perched on a high hill, was overthrown, and the land famous for Briseis' capture; Chryse, too, lies low, cause of strife for kings, and Tenedos, well known in fame, and fertile Scyros, which on its rich pasturage feeds the Thracian flocks, and Lesbos, cleaving in twain the Aegean sea, and Cilla, sacred to Phoebus; and what of the lands which the Caycus washes, his waters swollen by the floods of spring?

This great overthrow of nations, this widespread terror, all these cities wrecked as by a tornado's blast, to another could have been glory and the height of fame; to Achilles they were but deeds upon the way. 'Twas thus my father came, and so great wars he waged while but preparing war. Though I speak not of other merits, would not Hector alone have been enough? My father conquered Ilium; you have plundered it. Proud am I to rehearse my great sire's illustrious praises and glorious deeds: Hector lies low, slain before his father's eyes, and Memnon before his uncle's, in sorrow for whose death his mother with wan face ushered in a mournful day, while the victor shuddered at the lesson of his own work, and Achilles learned that even sons of goddesses can die. Then fell the fierce Amazon, our latest

1 Nestor. 2 See Index s.v. "Achilles." 3 See "Telephus." 4 Aurora, goddess of the dawn. 5 Penthesilea, queen of the Amazons.
debes Achilli, merita si digne aestimas,
et si ex Mycenis virginem atque Argis petat.
dubitatur et iam placita nunc subito improbas Priamique natam Pelei nato ferum
mactare credis? at tuam natam parens
Helenae immolasti. solita iam et facta expeto.

AGAMEMNON

Iuvenile vitium est regere non posse impetum; 250
aetatis alios fervor hic primus rapit, Pyrrhum paternus. spiritus quondam truces
minasque tumidi lentus Aeacidae tuli.
quo plura possis, plura patienter feras.

Quid caede dira nobiles clari ducis
aspergis umbras? noscere hoc primum deceat, quid facere victor debeat, victus pati.
violenta nemo imperia continuit diu, moderata durant; quoque Fortuna altius
evexit ac levavit humanas opes, hoc se magis supprimere felicem deceat variosque casus tremere metuentem deos nimium faventes. magna momento obrui vincendo didici. Troia nos tumidos facit nimium ac feroce? stamus hoc Danai loco, unde illa cecidit. fateor, aliquando impotens
regno ac superbus altius memet tuli;
sed fregit illos spiritus haec quae dare
potuisset aliis causa, Fortunae favor.
tu me superbum, Priame, tu timidum facis

142
dread. Thou art Achilles' debtor, if rightly thou estimate his worth, even if he should ask a maiden from Mycenae and from Argos. Dost hesitate and now of a sudden deem wrong what has already been approved, and count it cruel to sacrifice Priam's daughter to Peleus' son? And yet thine own daughter for Helen's sake thou, her sire, didst immolate. I claim but what is already use and precedent.

AGAMEMNON

Ungoverned violence is a fault of youth; in the case of others 'tis the first fervour of their years that sweeps them on, but with Pyrrhus 'tis his father's heat. The blustering airs and threats of arrogant Aeacides I once bore unmoved. The greater the might, the more should be the patience to endure.

Why with cruel bloodshed dost thou besmirch the noble shade of an illustrious chief? This 'twere fitting first to learn, what the victor ought to do, the vanquished, suffer. Ungoverned power no one can long retain; controlled, it lasts; and the higher Fortune has raised and exalted the might of man, the more does it become him to be modest in prosperity, to tremble at shifting circumstance, and to fear the gods when they are overkind. | That greatness can be in a moment overthrown I have learned by conquering. Does Troy make us too arrogant and bold? We Greeks are standing in the place whence she has fallen. In the past, I grant, I have been headstrong in government and borne myself too haughtily; but such pride has been broken by that cause which could have produced it in another, e'en Fortune's favour. Thou, Priam, mak'st me proud—and fearful, too.

1 i.e. if he should ask for a Grecian maid, even a daughter of Agamemnon.

2 Probably a covert allusion to the sacrifice of Iphigenia.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Ego esse quicquam sceptra nisi vano putem fulgore tectum nomen et falsō comam vinclo decentem? casus haec rapiet brevis, nec mille forsān ratibus aut annis decem:
non omnibus fortuna tam lenta immīnet.1
equidem fātebor (pace dixisse hoc tua, Argiva tellus, liceat) affligi Phrygas vincique volui; ruere et aequari solō—ütinam arcuisset. sed regi frenis nequit et ira et ardens hostis et victoria commissa nocti. quidquid indignum aut ferum cuiquam videri potuit, hoc fecit dolor tenebraeque, per quas ipse se irritat furor, gladiusque felix, cūius infecti semel vecors libido est. quidquid eversae potest superesse Troiae, maneat; exactum satis
poenarum et ultra est. regia ut virgo occidat turnuloque donum detur et cineres riget et facinus atrox caedis ut thalamos vocent,
non patiar. in me culpa cunctorum rēdit;
qui non vetat peccare, cum possit, iubet.

PYRRHVS

Nullumne Achillis præmium manes ferent?

AGAMEMNON

Ferent, et illum laudibus cuncti canent
magnūmque terrae nomen ignotae audient.
quod si levatur sanguine infuso cinis,
opima Phrygii colla caedantur greges
fluatque nullī flebilis matri cruor.
quīs iste mos est? quando in inferiās homo est

1 Leo deletēs this line.
Should I count sovereignty anything but a name bedecked with empty glamour, a brow adorned with a lying coronet? Brief chance will plunder these, mayhap without the aid of a thousand ships or ten long years: Fate hangs not over all so long. For my part, I will confess—thy pardon for saying it, O Argive land!—I wished to see the Phrygians beaten down and conquered; but overthrown and razed to the ground—would that I could have spared them that. But wrath, the fiery foeman, victory given to night’s charge, these cannot be kept in hand. All that any might have deemed unworthy in me or brutal, this resentment wrought and darkness, whereby fury is spurred to greater fury, and the victorious sword, whose blood-lust, when once stained with blood, is madness. All that can survive of ruined Troy let it survive; enough and more of punishment has been exacted. That a royal maid should fall, be offered to a tomb, should water the ashes of the dead, and that men should call foul murder marriage, I will not permit. The blame of all comes back on me; he who, when he may, forbids not sin, commands it.

And shall Achilles’ ghost gain no reward?

It shall; all shall sing his praises and unknown lands shall hear his mighty name. But if his dust can be appeased only by on-poured blood, let Phrygian cattle, rich spoil, be slain, and let blood flow which will cause no mother’s tears. What custom this? When was a human victim offered up impensus hominis? detrahe invidiam tuo odiumque patri, quem coli poena iubes.

PYRRHVS

O tumide, rerum dum secundarum status extollit animos, timide cum increpuit metus, regum tyranne! iamne flammatum geris amore subito\(^1\) pectus ac veneris novae? solusne totiens spolia de nobis feres? hae dextra Achilli victimam reddam suam. quam si negas retinesque, maiorem dabo dignamque quam det Pyrrhus; et nimiun diu a caede nostra regia cessat manus paremque poscit Priamus.

AGAMEMNON

Haud equidem nego hoc esse Pyrrhi maximum in bello decus, saevo peremptus ense quod Priamus iacet, supplex paternus.

PYRRHVS

Supplices nostri patris hostesque eosdem novimus. Priamus tamen praesens rogavit; tu gravi pavidus metu, nec ad rogandum fortis, Aiaci preces Ithacoque mandas clausus atque hostem tremens.

AGAMEMNON

At non timebat tunc tuus, fateor, parens, interque caedes Graeciae atque uustas rates

\(^1\) So Leo, with π: solito ψ: Leo conjectures amoris igne: Richter amoris aestu: Peiper amore nuptae.
TROADES

in honour of human dead? Save thy father from scorn and hate, whom thou art bidding us honour by a maiden’s death.

PYRRHUS

O thou swollen with pride so long as prosperity exalts thy soul, but faint of heart when the alarms of war resound, tyrant of kings! Is now thy heart inflamed with sudden love and of a new mistress? Art thou alone so often to bear off our spoils? With this right hand will I give to Achilles the victim due. If thou dost refuse and keep her from me, a greater will I give, worthy the gift of Pyrrhus; too long has my hand refrained from killing kings, and Priam claims his peer.

AGAMEMNON

Nay, I deny not that ’tis Pyrrhus’ most glorious deed of war that Priam lies slain by thy brutal sword, and he thy father’s supplicant.¹

PYRRHUS

Yea, I know my father’s suppliants—and enemies, too. And yet in my father’s presence Priam prayed; thou, quaking with o’ermastering fear, not brave enough to make thy own plea, didst delegate thy prayers to Ajax and the Ithacan, staying hid in thy tent and trembling at thy foe.²

AGAMEMNON

But no fear then, I grant it, had thy father, and mid Grecian carnage and their blazing ships idly he ¹ Priam sought out Achilles to ransom Hector’s body.

² This scene is described in Homer, Iliad, bk. IX.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

segnis iacebat belli et armorum immemor, levi canoram verberans plectro chelyn.

PYRRHVS

Tunc magnus Hector, arma contemnens tua, cantus Achillis timuit et tanto in metu navalibus, pax alta Thessalicis fuit.

AGAMEMNON

Nempe isdem in istis Thessalis navalibus pax alta rursus Hectoris patri fuit.

PYRRHVS

Est regis alti spiritum regi dare.

AGAMEMNON

Cur dextra regi spiritum eripuit tua?

PYRRHVS

Mortem misericors saepe pro vita dabit.

AGAMEMNON

Et nunc misericors virginem busto petis?

PYRRHVS

Iamne immolari virgines credis nefas?

AGAMEMNON

Praeferre patriam liberis regem decet.
TROADES

lay, thoughtless of war and arms, strumming with dainty quill on tuneful lyre.

PYRRHUS

Then mighty Hector, though he scorned thy arms, still feared Achilles' songs, and midst so great general dread deep peace lay on the ship-camp of Thessaly.¹

AGAMEMNON

Yes, and in that same ship-camp of Thessaly deep peace, again, did Hector's father find.

PYRRHUS

'Tis a high, a kingly act to give life to a king.

AGAMEMNON

Why then from a king did thy right hand take life?

PYRRHUS

The merciful will oft give death instead of life.

AGAMEMNON

And is it now in mercy thou seekest a maiden for the tomb?

PYRRHUS

So now thou deemst the sacrifice of maids a crime?

AGAMEMNON

To put country before children befits a king.

¹ i.e. in the camp of Achilles' Thessalians, who dwelt in huts by their ships drawn up on the shore.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

PYRRHVS
Lex nulla capto parcit aut poenam impedit.

AGAMEMNON
Quod non vetat lex, hoc vetat fieri pudor.

PYRRHVS
Quodecumque libuit facere victori licet.

AGAMEMNON
Minimum decet libere cui multum licet.

PYRRHVS
His ista iactas, quos decem annorum gravi regno subactos Pyrrhus exsolvit iugo?

AGAMEMNON
Hos Scyrus animos—?

PYRRHVS
Scelere quae fratum caret.

AGAMEMNON
Inclusa fluctu—

PYRRHVS
Nempe cognati maris. 340
Atrei et Thyestae nobilem novi domum.
150
TROADES

PYRRHUS
No law spares the captive or stays the penalty.

AGAMEMNON
What law forbids not, shame forbids be done.

PYRRHUS
Whate'er he will, 'tis the victor's right to do.

AGAMEMNON
Least should he will who has much right.

PYRRHUS
Darest fling such words to those whom, overwhelmed beneath thy heavy sway for ten long years, Pyrrhus freed from the yoke?

AGAMEMNON
Does Scyrus give such airs?

PYRRHUS
'Tis free from the crime of brothers.

AGAMEMNON
Hemmed by the waves—

PYRRHUS
Yes, of a kindred sea. Atreus and Thyestes—well do I know their noble house.

1 A reference to Atreus and Thyestes, father and uncle of Agamemnon, who committed all crimes against each other.
2 Explained in l. 346; and see l. 193 and note.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

AGAMEMNON

Ex virginis concepte furtivo stupro
et ex Achille nate, sed nondum viro—

PYRRHVS

Illo ex Achille, genere qui mundum suo sparsus per omne caelitum regnum tenet:
Thetide acquir, umbras Aeaco, caelum Iove.

AGAMEMNON

Illo ex Achille, qui manu Paridis iacet.

PYRRHVS

Quem nec deorum comminus quisquam petit.

AGAMEMNON

Compescere equidem verba et audacem malo poteram domare; sed meus captis quoque
scit parcere ensis. potius interpres deum Calchas vocetur. fata si poscent, dabo.

Tu qui Pelasgae vincla solvisti rati morasque bellis, arte qui reseras polum, cui viscerum secreta, cui mundi fragor et stella longa semitam flamma trahens dant signa fati, cuius ingenti milhi mercede constant ora: quid iubeat deus effare, Calchas, nosque consilio rege.
TROADES

AGAMEMNON

Thou son of a maiden’s secret shame\(^1\) and of Achilles, but scarce yet a man—

PYRRHUS

Of that Achilles who by right of lineage extends throughout the realm of the immortals and claims the universe: the sea through Thetis, through Aeacus the shades, the heavens through Jove.

AGAMEMNON

Of that Achilles who lies slain by Paris’ hand.

PYRRHUS

Whom e’en a god would not contend with face to face.

AGAMEMNON

I could check thy words and curb thy recklessness by punishment; but my sword knows how to spare e’en captives. Rather, let Calchas, the interpreter of the gods, be called. If the fates demand, I will give her up.

[Enter Calchas.]

\(^{353}\) Thou who didst free the Pelasgian fleet from bonds, and didst end the wars’ delays, who by thy art dost unlock the sky, to whom the entrails’ secrets, to whom the crashing heavens and the star with its long, flaming trail disclose the fates, thou whose utterances ever cost me dear: what is God’s will, declare, O Calchas, and by thy wisdom guide us.

\(^1\) See Index s.v. “Pyrrhus.”
Dant fata Danais quo solent pretio viam. mactanda virgo est Thessali busto ducis; sed quo iugari Thessalae cultu solent Ionidesve vel Mycenaeae nurus, Pyrrhus parenti coniugem tradat suo. sic rite dabitur. non tamen nostras tenet haee una puppes causa; nobilior tuo, Polyxene, cruore debetur cruor. quem fata quaeunt, turre de summa cadat Priami nepos Hectoreus et letum oppetat. tum mille velis impleat classis freta.

CHORVS

Verum est an timidos fabula decipit umbras corporibus vivere conditis, cum coniunx oculis imposuit manum supremusque dies solibus obstitit et tristis cineres una cohercuit? non prodest animam tradere funeri, sed restat miseris vivere longius? an toti morimur nullaque pars manet nostri, cum profugo spiritus halitu immixtus nebulis cessit in aera et nudum tetigit subdita fax latus?

Quidquid sol oriens, quidquid et occidens novit, caeruleis Oceanus fretis quidquid bis veniens et fugiens lavat, aetas Pegaseo corripiet gradu. quo bis sena volant sidera turbine, quo cursu properat volvere saecula astrorum dominus, quo properat modo obliquis Hecate currere flexibus;
TROADES

CALCHAS

'Tis at the accustomed price fate grants the Danaï their voyage. A maiden must be sacrificed on the Thessalian chieftain's tomb; but in the garb in which Thessalian brides are wed, or Ionian or Mycenaean, let Pyrrhus lead his father's bride to him. 'Tis so she shall be given duly. But it is not this cause alone which delays our ships; blood nobler than thy blood, Polyxena, is due. Whom the fates seek, from the high watch-tower let him fall, Priam's grandson, Hector's son, and let him perish there. Then with its thousand sails may the fleet fill the seas.

CHORUS

Is it true, or does the tale cheat timid souls, that spirits live on when bodies have been buried, when the wife has closed her husband's eyes, when the last day has blotted out the sun, when the mournful urn holds fast our dust? Profits it not to give up the soul to death, but remains it for wretched mortals to live still longer? Or do we wholly die and does no part of us remain, when with the fleeting breath the spirit, mingling with vapours, has passed into the air, and the lighted fire has touched the naked body?

382 All that the rising sun and all that the setting knows, all that the ocean laves with its blue waters, twice ebbing and twice flowing, time with the pace of Pegasus shall gather in. With such whirlwind speed as the twelve signs fly along, with such swift course as the lord 1 of stars hurries on the centuries, and in such wise as Hecate hastens along her slanting

1 The sun.
SENCAE TRAGOEDIAE

hoc omnes petimus fata nec amplius, iuratos superis qui tetigit lacus,
usquam est. ut calidis fumus ab ignibus
vanescit, spatium per breve sordidus, ut nubes, gravidas quas modo vidimus, arctoi Boreae dissicit impetus;
sic hic, quo regimur, spiritus effluet.
post mortem nihil est ipsaque mors nihil,
velocis spatii meta novissima.
spem ponant avidi, solliciti metum;
tempus nos avidum devorat et chaos.
mors individua est, noxia corpori nec parcens animae. Taenara et aspero regnum sub domino limen et obsidens custos non facili Cerberus ostio rumores vacui verbaque inania et par sollicito fabula somnio.
quae quis quo iaceas post obitum loco?
quo non nata iacent.

ANDROMACHA

Quid, maesta Phrygiae turba, laceratis comas miserumque tunsae pectus effuso genas fletu rigatis? levia perpessae sumus, si flenda patimur. Ilium vobis modo, mihi cecidit olim, cum ferus curru incito
mea membra raperet et gravi gemeret sono Peliacus axis pondere Hectoreo tremens.

1 The Styx.
2 individua is used here in evident reminiscence of Cicero, ways, so do we all seek fate, and nevermore does he exist at all who has reached the pool whereby the high gods swear. As smoke from burning fires vanishes, staining the air for one brief moment; as clouds, which but now we saw lowering, are scattered by the cold blasts of Boreas, so shall this spirit which rules our bodies flow away. There is nothing after death, and death itself is nothing, the final goal of a course full swiftly run. Let the eager give up their hopes; their fears, the anxious; greedy time and chaos engulf us altogether. Death is a something that admits no cleavage, destructive to the body and unsparing of the soul. Taenarus and the cruel tyrant's kingdom and Cerberus, guarding the portal of no easy passage—all are but idle rumours, empty words, a tale light as a troubled dream. Dost ask where thou shalt lie when death has claimed thee? Where they lie who were never born.

[Enter Andromache, leading her little son, Astyanax, and accompanied by an aged man-servant.]

Andromache

Ye Phrygian women, mournful band, why do you tear your hair, beat on your wretched breasts, and water your cheeks with weeping unrestrained? Trivial woes have we endured if our sufferings can be told by tears. Ilium has fallen but now for you; for me she fell long since, when the cruel foeman behind his swift car dragged limbs—my own, and his axle-tree, on Pelion hewed, groaned loud, straining beneath Hector's weight. On that day over-

---

Pluto, lord of death.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

tunc obruta atque etversa quodcumque accidit
torpens malis rigensque sine sensu fero,
iam ereptam Danais coniugem sequerem meum,
nisi hic teneret. hic meos animos domat morique prohibet; cogit hic aliquid deos adhuc rogare, tempus aerumnae addidit.
hic mihi malorum maximum fructum abstulit,
nihil timere. prosperis rebus locus
eruptus omnis, dira qua veniant habent.
miserrimum est timere, cum spes nihil,

SENEX

Quis te repens commovit afflictam metus?

ANDROMACHA

Exoritur aliquod maius ex magno malum.
nondum ruentis Ilii fatum stetit.

SENEX

Et quas reperiet, ut velit, clades deus?

ANDROMACHA

Stygis profundae claustra et obscuri specus laxantur et, ne desit eversis metus, hostes ab imo conditi Dite exeunt.
solisne retro pervium est Danais iter?
certe aequa mors est; turbat atque agitat Phrygas communis iste terror; hic proprie meum exterret animum noctis horrendae sopor.
whelmed and ruined, whatever has happened since I bear, benumbed with woe, stony, insensible. And now, escaping the Greeks, I should follow my husband, if this child held me not. He tames my spirit and prevents my death; he forces me still to ask something of the gods, has prolonged my suffering. He has robbed me of the richest fruit of sorrows, the scorn of fear. All chance of happiness has been snatched away from me; calamity has still a door of entrance. Most wretched 'tis to fear when you can hope for naught.

OLD MAN

What sudden terror has stirred thy stricken soul?

ANDROMACHE

Some greater woe from woe already great arises. The fate of falling Ilium is not yet stayed.

OLD MAN

What new disasters, though he wish, will the god discover?

ANDROMACHE

The bars of deep Styx and its darksome caves are opened and, lest terror be wanting to our overthrow, our buried foemen come forth from lowest Dis. To the Greeks only is a backward passage given? Death surely is impartial. That terror\(^1\) disturbs and alarms all Phrygians alike; but this vision\(^2\) of dread night doth terrify my soul alone.

\(^1\) Achilles' ghost.

\(^2\) i.e. Hector's ghost.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

SENEX

Quae visa portas? effer in medium metus.

ANDROMACHA

Partes fere nox alma transierat duas clarumque septem verterant stellae ingum; ignota tandem venit afflictae quies brevisque fessis somnus obrepsit genus, si somnus ille est mentis attonitae stupor; cum subito nostros Hector ante oculos stetit, non qualis ultro bella in Argivos ferens Graias petebat facibus Idaeis rates, nec caede multa qualis in Danaos furens vera ex Achille spolia simulato tulit, non ille vultus flammum intendens iubar, sed fessus ac deiectus et fletu gravis similisque nostro, squalida obtectus coma. iuvat tamen vidisse. tum quassans caput: "dispelle somnos" inquit "et naturam eripe, o fida coniunx; lateat, haec una est salus. omitte fletus! Troia quod cecidit gemis? utinam iaceret tota. festina, amove quocumque nostrae parvulam stirpem domus." mihi gelidus horror ac tremor somnum expulit, oculosque nunc hue pavida, nunc illuc ferens oblita nati misera quaesivi Hectorem; fallax per ipsos umbra complexus abit. 460

O nate, magni certa progenies patris, spes una Phrygibus, unica afflictae domus, 160
TROADES

OLD MAN

What vision hast thou to tell? Speak out thy fears before us all.

ANDROMACHE

Two portions of her course had kindly night well-nigh passed, and the seven stars had turned their shining car; at last long unfamiliar calm came to my troubled heart, and a brief slumber stole o'er my weary cheeks—if, indeed, the stupor of a mind all dazed be slumber—when suddenly Hector stood before my eyes, not in such guise as when, forcing the fight against the Argives, he attacked the Grecian ships with torches from Ida's pines, not as when he raged in copious slaughter against the Danaï and bore off true spoils from a feigned Achilles; not such his face, blazing with battle light, but weary, downcast, heavy with weeping, like my own, covered with matted locks. Even so, 'twas joy to have looked upon him. Then, shaking his head, he said: "Rouse thee from slumber and save our son, O faithful wife! hide him; 'tis the only hope of safety. Away with tears! Dost grieve because Troy has fallen? Would she were fallen utterly!* Make haste, remove to any place soever the little scion of our house."

Cold horror and trembling banished sleep; quaking with terror, I turned my eyes now here, now there, taking no thought of my son, and piteously seeking Hector; but from my very arms his cheating ghost was gone.

1 Patroclus, who was fighting in the borrowed armour of his friend, Achilles.
2 He intimates that there is a deeper depth of woe yet to come.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

veterisque suboles sanguinis nimium incliti nimiumque patri similis; hos vultus meus nabebat Hector, talis incessu fuit habituque talis, sic tulit fortes manus, sic celsus umeris, fronte sic torva minax cervice fusam dissipans iacta comam.
o nate sero Phrygibus, o matri cito, eritne tempus illud ac felix dies quo Troici defensor et vindex soli rediviva ponas Pergama et sparsos fuga
cives reducas, nomen et patriae suum Phrygibusque reddas? sed mei fati memor tam magna timeo vota—quod captis sat est, vivamus.

Heu me, quis locus fidus meo
erit timori quave te sede occulam?
arx illa pollens opibus et muris deum,
gentes per omnes clara et invidiae gravis,
nune pulvis altus, strata sunt flamma omnia
superestque vasta ex urbe ne tantum quidem, quo lateat insans. quem locum fraudi legam?
est tumulus ingens coniugis cari sacer,
verendus hosti, mole quem immensa parens
opibusque magnis struxit, in luctus suos
rex non avarus. optime credam patri.
sudor per artus frigidus totos cadit;
omen tremesco misera feralis loci.

470

SENEX

Miser occupet praesidia, securus legat.1

497

ANDROMACHA

Quid quod latere sine metu magno nequit, ne prodat aliquis?

496

1 The order of II. 488–498 is Leo’s: Richter follows this,
except that he reads l. 491 after 495.
child of an ancient, too illustrious line, too like thy father, thou; such features my Hector had, such was he in gait, such in bearing; so carried he his brave hands, so bore he his shoulders high, such august, commanding look had he as with head thrown proudly back he tossed his flowing locks. O son, born too late for the Phrygians, too soon for thy mother, will that time ever come and that happy day when, as defender and avenger of the Trojan land, thou shalt establish Pergama restored, bring back its scattered citizens from flight, and give again their name to fatherland and Phrygians? But, remembering my own lot, I shrink from such proud prayers; this is enough for captives—may we but live!

Ah me, what place will be faithful to my fears? where shall I hide thee? That citadel, once rich in treasure and its god-built walls, amongst all nations famed and envied, is now deep dust, wasted utterly by fire; and of that huge city not even enough is left wherein a child may hide. What place shall I choose to cheat them? There is my dear lord’s great tomb, hallowed, awe-inspiring to the foe, which of huge bulk and at mighty cost his father reared, a prince not niggardly in his grief. To his sire shall I best entrust the child. Cold sweat streams down all my limbs. Ah me! I shudder at the omen of the place of death.

OLD MAN

In wretchedness, seize any refuge; in safety, choose.

ANDROMACHE

What that he cannot hide without great danger of betrayal?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

SENEX

Amove testes doli. 492

ANDROMACHA

Si quaeret hostis?

SENEX

Vrbe in eversa perit; 493
haec causa multos una ab interitu arcuit, credi perisse.

ANDROMACHA

Vix spei quicquam est super; 490 grave pondus illum magna nobilitas premit. 491
quid proderit latuisse redituro in manus?

SENEX

Victor feroces impetus primos habet. 495

ANDROMACHA

Quis te locus, quae regio seducta, invia, 498
tuto reponet? quis feret trepidis opem?
quis proteget? qui semper, etiam nunc tuos, Hector, tuere; coniugis furtum piae
serva et fidei cinere victurum excipe.
succede tumulo, nate—quid retro fugis tutasque latebras spernis? agnosco indolem;
pudet timere. spiritus magnos fuga
animosque veteres, sume quos casus dedit.
en intuere, turba quae sinus super—164
TROADES

OLD MAN

Have none to see thy guile.

ANDROMACHE

If the foe inquire?

OLD MAN

He perished in the city's downfall; this cause alone has saved many from destruction—the belief that they have perished.

ANDROMACHE

Scant hope is left; the crushing weight of his noble birth lies heavy on him. What will it profit him to have hidden, when he must fall into their hands?

OLD MAN

The victor's first onslaughts are the deadliest.

ANDROMACHE [to ASTYANAX]

What place, what spot, remote and inaccessible, will keep thee safe? Who will bring help in our sore need? Who will protect? O Hector, who didst always shield thine own, shield them even now; guard thou a wife's pious theft and to thy faithful ashes take him to live again. Enter the tomb, my son—why dost thou shrink back and reject this safe hiding-place? I recognize thy breeding; thou art ashamed of fear. But put away thy high spirit and old-time courage; put on such spirit as misfortune grants. See how small
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

tumulus, puer, captiva; cedendum est malis.
sanctas parentis conditi sedes age
aude subire. fata si miseris iuvant, habes salutem; fata si vitam negant,
habes sepulchrum.

SENEX

Claustra commissum tegunt;
quem ne tuus producat in medium timor,
procul hinc recede teque diversam amove.

ANDROMACHA

Levius solet timere, qui proprius timet;
sed, si placet, referamus hinc alio pedem.

SENEX

Cohibe parumper ora questusque opprime;
gressus nefandos dux Cephalanum admovet.

ANDROMACHA

Dehisce tellus tuque, coniunx, ultimo
specu revulsam scinde tellurem et Stygis sinu profundo conde depositum meum, adest Vlixes, et quidem dubio gradu
vultuque; necit pectore astus callidos.

166
a company of us remains—a tomb, a child, a captive woman; we must yield to ills. Come, boldly enter the sacred home of thy buried father. If the fates befriended the wretched, thou hast a safe retreat; if the fates deny thee life, thou hast a tomb.

[ASTYANAX enters the tomb and the gates are closed and barred behind him.]

OLD MAN

The bars protect their charge; and, that thy fear may not hale him forth, retire thou far from here and withdraw thyself apart.

ANDROMACHE

Who fears from near at hand, fears often less; but if thou thinkest well, we will betake us elsewhere.

[ULYSSES is seen approaching.]

OLD MAN

Be still a little while, utter no word or cry; the leader of the Cephallanians hither bends his accursed steps.

ANDROMACHE

[With a final appealing look towards the tomb.]

Yawn deep, O earth, and thou, my husband, rive the rent earth to its lowest caves and hide the charge I give thee in the deep bosom of the Styx. Ulysses is here, with step and look of one in hesitation; in his heart he weaves some crafty stratagem.

[Enter Ulysses.]
Durae minister sortis hoc primum peto, ut, ore quamvis verba dicantur meo, non esse credas nostra; Graiorum omnium procerumque vox est, petere quos seras domos Hectorea suboles prohibet; hanc fata expetunt. sollicita Danaos pacis incertae fides semper tenebit, semper a tergo timor respicere coget, arma nec poni sinet, dum Phrygibus animos natus eversis dabit, Andromacha, vester. augur haec Calchas canit; et, si taceret augur haec Calchas, tamen dicebat Hector, cuius et stirpem horreo; generosa in ortus semina exurgunt suos. sic ille magni parvus armenti comes primisque nondum cornibus findens cutem cervice subito celsus et fronte arduus gregem paternum ducit ac pecori imperat; quae tenera caeso virga de trunco stetit, par ipsa matri tempore exigu subit umbrasque terris reddit et caelo nemus; sic male relictus igne de magno cinis vires resumit. est quidem iniustus dolor rerum aestimator; si tamen tecum exigas, veniam dabis, quod bella post hiemes decem totidemque messes iam senex miles timet aliasque clades rursus ac numquam bene Troiam iacentem. magna res Danaos movet, futurus Hector. libera Graios metu.
ULYSSES

As the minister of harsh fate I beg this first, that, although the words are uttered by my lips, thou count them not my words; it is the voice of all the Grecian chiefs, whom Hector's son is keeping from their late home-coming; 'tis the fates demand him. A fretting mistrust of uncertain peace will ever possess the Danaï, and fear ever will force them to look behind and not let them lay down their arms, so long as thy son, Andromache, and Hector's shall give heart to the conquered Phrygians. Calchas, the augur, gives this response; and if Calchas, the augur, were silent upon this, yet Hector used to say it, and I dread even a son of his; the generous scion grows to its parent's likeness. So that little companion of the mighty herd, his first horns not yet sprouting through the skin, suddenly, with high-borne neck and proudly lifted brow, leads his father's herd and rules the drove; the slender shoot which has sprung up from a lopped-off trunk in a little while rises to match the parent tree, gives back shade to the earth and a sacred grove to heaven; so do the embers of a great fire, carelessly left behind, regain their strength. I know that grief is no impartial judge; still, if thou weigh the matter with thyself, thou wilt forgive a soldier if, after ten winters and as many harvest seasons, now veteran he fears war, fears still other bloody battles and Troy never wholly o'erthrown. A great matter moves the forebodings of the Danaï—another Hector. Free the Greeks haec una naves causa deductas tenet, hae classis haeret. neve crudelem putes,
quod sorte iussus Hectoris natum petam;
petissem Oresten. patere quod victor tulit.

ANDROMACHA

Vtinam quidem esses, nate, materna in manu, nossemque quis te casus creptum mihi teneret, aut quae regio—non hostilibus confossa telis pectus ac vinclis manus secantibus praesticta, non acri latus utrumque flamma cineta maternam fidem umquam exuissem. nate, quis te nunc locus, fortuna quae possedit? errore avio vagus arva lustrala? vastus an patriae vapor corripuit artus? saevus an victor tuo lusit cruore? numquid immanis ferae
morsu peremptus pascis Idaeas aves?

VLIxes

Simulata remove verba; non facile est tibi
decipere Vlixen; vicimus matrum dolos, etiam dearum. cassa consilia amove;
ubi natus est?

ANDROMACHA

Vbi Hector? ubi cuncti Phryges?
ubi Priamus? unum quaeris; ego quaero omnia.
from fear. This one cause holds our ships, already launched; this cause stays the fleet. And think me not cruel because, at the bidding of the lot, I seek Hector's son; I would have sought Orestes. Bear thou what thy conqueror has borne.

ANDROMACHE

Oh, that thou wert within thy mother's reach, my son, and that I knew what hap holds thee now snatched from my arms, or what place—not though my breast were pierced with hostile spears, and my hands bound with cutting chains, not though scorching flames hemmed me on either side, would I ever put off a mother's loyalty. O son, what place, what fate, hath gotten thee now? On some pathless way dost thou roam the fields? Has the vast burning of thy fatherland consumed thy frame? or has some rude conqueror revelled in thy blood? Slain by some wild beast's fangs, dost feed the birds of Ida?

ULYSES

Have done with lies; 'tis not easy for thee to deceive Ulysses; we have out-matched the wiles of mothers and even of goddesses. Away with vain designs; where is thy son?

ANDROMACHE

Where is Hector? Where all the Phrygians? Where is Priam? Thou seekest one; I seek for all.

1 i.e. even the son of Agamemnon.
2 An evident allusion to the sacrifice of Iphigenia by Agamemnon for the public good.
3 It was Ulysses who had tricked Clytemnestra into letting Iphigenia go to Aulis, and had discovered the disguise under which Thetis had hidden her son, Achilles.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

VLIXES
Coacta dices sponte quod fari abnuis.

ANDROMACHA
Tuta est, perire quae potest debet cupit.

VLIXES
Magnifica verba mors prope admota excutit.

ANDROMACHA
Si vis, Vlixe, cogere Andromacham metu, vitam minare; nam mori votum est mihi.

VLIXES
Verberibus igni omnique\(^1\) cruciatu eloqui quodcumque celas adiget invitam dolor et pectore imo condita arcana eruet; necessitas plus posse quam pietas solet.

ANDROMACHA
Propone flammas, vulnera et diras mali doloris artes et famem et saevam sitim variasque pestes undique, et ferrum inditum visceribus istis, carceris caeci luem, et quidquid audet victor iratus timens.

VLIXES
Stulta est fides celare quod prodas statim.\(^2\)

ANDROMACHA
Animosa nullos mater admittit metus.

\(^1\) omnique Leo: morte MSS. \(^2\) Leo deletes this line.
ULYSSES

Thou shalt be forced to tell what of thyself thou wilt not.

ANDROMACHE

She is safe who is able, who ought, who longs to die.

ULYSSES

When death draws near it drives out boastful words.

ANDROMACHE

If thou desirest, Ulysses, to force Andromache through fear, threaten her with life; for 'tis my prayer to die.

ULYSSES

Stripes, fire, and every form of torture shall force thee against thy will, through pain, to speak out what thou concealest, and from thy heart shall tear its inmost secrets; necessity is oft a greater force than love.

ANDROMACHE

Bring on thy flames, wounds, devilish arts of cruel pain, and starvation and raging thirst, plagues of all sorts from every source, and the sword thrust deep within these vitals, the dungeon's pestilential gloom, yea, all a victor dares in rage—and fear.

ULYSSES

'Tis foolish confidence to hide what thou must at once betray.

ANDROMACHE

My dauntless mother-love admits no fears.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

VLIxes

Hic ipse, quo nunc contuniax perstas, amor consulere parvis liberis Danaos monet. post arma tam longinqua, post annos decem minus timerem quos facit Calchas metus, si mihi timerem. bella Telemacho paras.

Andromachia

Invita, Vlixe, gaudium Danais dabo; dandum est; fatere quos premis luctus, dolor. gaudete, Atridae, tuque laetifica, ut soles, refer Pelasgis—Hectoris proles obit.

VLIxes

Et esse verum hoc qua probas Danais fide?

Andromachia

Ita quod minari maximum victor potest contingat et me fata maturo exitu facilique solvant ac meo condant solo et patria tellus Hectorem leviter premat, ut luce cassus inter extinctos iacet datusque tumulo debita exanimis tuli.

VLIxes

Expleta fata stirpe sublata Hectoris solidamque pacem laetus ad Danaos feram—
This very love, in which thou now dost stubbornly withstand us, warns the Danaï to take thought for their little sons. After a war so distant, after ten years of strife, I should feel less the fears which Calchas rouses, if 'twas for myself I feared. Thou art preparing war against Telemachus.

Unwillingly, Ulysses, will I give to the Danaï cause for joy, but I must give it; confess, O grief, the woes which thou wouldst conceal. Rejoice, ye sons of Atreus, and do thou bear joyful tidings to the Pelasgians as is thy wont—Hector's son is dead.

What surety givest thou the Danaï that this is true?

So may the conqueror's worst threat befall, may fate set me free by an early and easy passing, may I be buried in my own soil, may his native earth rest light on Hector, according as my son, deprived of light, lies amongst the dead and, given to the tomb, has received the due of those who live no more.

That the fates have been fulfilled by the removal of Hector's stock, and that peace is secure, this news will I joyfully bear to the Danaï— [Aside.] What

1 Andromache first tells Ulysses to report that her son is dead; but she is not yet under oath; in the second statement, being under oath, she speaks words which give the literal truth, but seem to say the opposite.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

quid agis, Vlixe? Danaidae credent tibi, tu cui? parenti—fingit an quisquam hoc pares, nec abominandae mortis auspiciunm pavet? auspicia metuunt qui nihil maius timent. 610 fidem alligavit iure iurando suam; si peierat, timere quid gravius potest? nunc advoca astus, anime, nunc fraudes, dolos, nunc totum Vlixen; veritas numquam perit. scrutare matrem. maeret, inlacrimat, gemit; sed et huc et illuc anxios gressus refert missasque voces aure sollicita excipit; magis haec timet, quam maeret. ingenio est opus.

Alios parentes alloqui in luctu decet: tibi gratulandum est, misera, quod nato cares, 620 quem mors manebat saeva praecipitem datum e turre, lapsis sola quae muris manet.

ANDROMACHA

Reliquit animus membra, quatiuntur, labant torpetque vinctus frigido sanguis gelu.

VLIIXES

Intremuit; hac, hac parte quaeerenda est mihi; matrem timor detexit; iterabo metum.

Ite, ite celeres, fraude materna abditum hostem, Pelasgi nominis pestem ultimam, 176
doest thou, Ulysses? The Danaî will believe thy word, but whose word, thou? A mother's—or would any mother feign her offspring's death, and not shrink from the omen of the abhorrent word? Yet omens they fear who have naught worse to fear. She has confirmed her truth by oath; if the oath is false, what is the worse thing she can be fearing? Now, my heart, summon up thy craft, thy tricks, thy wiles, now all Ulysses; truth is never lost.¹ Watch the mother. She grieves, she weeps, she groans; now here, now there she wanders restlessly, straining her ears to catch each uttered word; this woman's fear is greater than her grief. Now have I need of skill.

[To ANDROMACHE.]

619 Other parents 'twere fitting to console in sorrow; but thou art to be congratulated, poor soul, that thou hast lost thy son, for a cruel death awaited him, cast headlong from the tower which still stands solitary midst the fallen walls.

ANDROMACHE [aside]

Life deserts my limbs, they quake, they fail; my blood stands still, congealed with icy cold.

ULYSSES [aside]

She trembles; by this, yes, by this means must I test her. Her fear has betrayed the mother; this fear will I redouble.

[To his attendants.]

627 Go, go quickly! This enemy, hidden away by his mother's guile, this last plague of the Pelasgian

¹ i.e. it is always to be discovered.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ubicumque latitat, erutam in medium date. Bene est! tenetur! perge, festina, attahe. quid respicis trepidasque? iam certe perit.

ANDROMACHA

Vtinam timerem! solitus ex longo est metus. dediscit animus sero quod didicit diu.

VLIXES

Lustrale quoniam debitum muris puer sacrum antecessit nec potest vatem, sequi meliore fato raptus, hoc Calchas ait modo piari posse redituras rates, si placet undas Hectoris sparsi cinis ac tumulus imo totus aequetur solo. nunc ille quoniam debitam effugit necem, erit admovenda sedibus sacris manus.

ANDROMACHA

Quid agimus? animum distrahit geminus timor: hinc natus, illinc coniugis sacri cinis. pars utra vincet? testor immites deos, deosque veros coniugis manes mei, non aliud, Hector, in meo nato mihi placere quam te. vivat, ut possit tuos referre vultus.—prorutus tumulo cinis

1 So Gronovius, with A: sicre (i.e. scire) E, and so Richter Leo saepe.

178
name, wherever he is hiding, hunt him out and bring him hither. [Pretending that the boy is discovered, and then speaking as if to the man who has found him.] Good! He is caught! Come, make haste and bring him in! [To ANDROMACHE.] Why dost thou look around and tremble? Surely he is already dead.

ANDROMACHE

Oh, that I were afraid! 'Tis but my wonted fear, sprung from long use. The mind unlearns but slowly what it has learned for long.

ULYSSSES

Since the boy has forestalled the lustral rites we owed the walls and cannot fulfil the priest's command, snatched from us by a better fate, the word of Calchas is that only thus can a peaceful homecoming be granted to our ships, if the waves be appeased by the scattering of Hector's ashes and his tomb be utterly levelled with the ground. Now, since the boy has escaped the death he owed, needs must hands be laid upon his hallowed resting-place.¹

ANDROMACHE [aside]

What shall I do? My mind is distracted by a double fear: here, for my son; there, for my husband's sacred dust. Which shall prevail? I call the unpitying deities to witness, and that true deity, my husband's shade, that in my son naught else endears him to me, Hector, than thyself. May he live, that so he may recall thy face.—But shall thy ashes, torn ¹ It need not be supposed that Ulysses suspects that Astyanax is really hidden in the tomb.

mergetur? ossa fluctibus spargi sinam disiecta vastis? potius hic mortem oppetat.— 650
poteris nefandae deditum mater neci videre? poteris celsa per fastigia missum rotari? potero, perpetiar, feram, dum non meus post fata victoris manu
iactetur Hector.—hic suam poenam potest sentire, at illum fata iam in tuto locant.—
quid fluctuaris? statue, quem poenae extrahas.
ingrata, dubitas? Hector est illine tuus—
erras—utrimque est Hector; hic sensus potens,
for san futurus ultor extincti patris—660 utrique parci non potest. quid iam facis?
ser va e duobus, anime, quem Danai timent.

Vlixes
Responsa peragam; funditus busta eruam

Andromacha
Quae vendidistis?

Vlixes
Pergam et e summo aggere
traham sepulchra.

Andromacha
Caelitum appello fidem
fidemque Achillis; Pyrrhe, genitoris tui munus tuere.

1 i.e. it is not really a choice between Hector and the boy, for Hector in a real sense is in the boy, who is to be another Hector. cf. 470 ff., 550.
from the tomb, be sunk beneath the sea? Shall I permit thy scattered bones to be flung upon the vasty deep? Sooner let the boy meet death.—But canst thou, his mother, see him given up to murder infamous? Canst see him sent whirling over the lofty battlements? I can, I will endure it, will suffer it, so but my Hector after death be not scattered by the victor's hand.—But he can still feel suffering, while death has placed the other beyond its reach. Why dost thou waver? decide whom thou wilt snatch from vengeance. Ungrateful woman, dost thou hesitate? On that side is thy Hector—nay, herein thou errest—Hector is in both; but the boy can still feel pain, and is destined perchance to avenge his father's death—both cannot be saved. What then? Save of the two, my soul, him whom the Danaï dread.

ULYSSES

I will fulfil the oracle; the tomb will I raze to its foundation.

ANDROMACHE

The tomb ye sold?

ULYSSES

I'll keep right on, and from the mound's top I'll drag the sepulchre.

ANDROMACHE

To heaven's faith I appeal, and Achilles' faith; Pyrrhus, protect thy father's gift.

1 Hector's body had been sold to Priam; here the idea of ransom is extended to the tomb as well.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Vlixes

Tumulus hic campo statim
toto iacebit.

Andromacha

Fuerat hoc prorsus nefas
Danais inausum. templae violastis, deos
etiam faventes; busta transierat furor.
resistam, inermes offeram armatis manus,
dabit ira vires. qualis Argolicas ferox turmas Amazon stravit, aut qualis deo percussa Maenas entheo silvas gradu armata thyrso terret atque expers sui vulnus dedit nec sensit, in medios ruam tumuloque cineris socia defenso cadam.

Vlixes

Cessatis et vos flebilis clamor movet furorque cassus feminae? iussa ocius peragite.

Andromacha

Me, me sternite hic ferro prius.
repellor, heu me. rumpe fatorum moras,
molire terras, Hector, ut Vlixen domes.
vel umbra satis es—arma concussit manu,
iaculatur ignes—cernitis, Danai, Hectorem?
an sola video?

Vlixes

Funditus cuncta eruam.
This mound shall at once lie level with the plain.

ANDROMACHE

Such sacrilege, truly, the Greeks had left undared. Temples you have profaned, even of your favouring gods; but our tombs your mad rage had spared. I will resist, will oppose my unarmed hands against you, armed; passion will give strength. Like the fierce Amazon who scattered the Argive squadrons, or like some god-smit Maenad who, armed with the thyrsus only, with frenzied march frightens the forest glades and, beside herself, has given wounds, nor felt them, so will I rush against you and fall in the tomb's defence, an ally of its dust.

ULYSSES [to his men]

Do you hold back, and does a woman's tearful outcry and futile rage move you? My orders—be quick and do them.

ANDROMACHE [struggling with the men]

Me, me destroy here with the sword sooner. Ah me, I am thrust back. O Hector, burst the bars of death, heave up the earth, that thou mayst quell Ulysses. Even as a shade thou art enough—he has brandished his arms in his hand, he is hurling fire-brands—ye Danaï, do you see Hector? or do I alone see him?

ULYSSES

I'll pull it down to its foundations, all of it.

1 In her frenzy she seems to see Hector's ghost.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ANDROMACHA

Quid agis? ruina pariter et natum et virum prosternis una? forsitan Danaos prece placare poteris.—conditum illidet statim immane busti pondus—intereat miser ubicumque potius, ne pater natum obruat prematque patrem natus.

Ad genua accido supplex, Vlixe, quamque nullius pedes novere dextram pedibus admoveo tuis. miserere matris et preces placidus pias patiensque recipe, quoque te celsum altius superi levarunt, mitius lapsos preme; misero datur quodcumque, fortunae datur. sic te revisat coniugis sanctae torus, annosque, dum te recipit, extendat suos Laerta; sic te iuvenis excipiat tuus, et vota vincens vestra felici indole aetate avum transcendat, ingenio patrem: miserere matris. unicum adflictae mihi solamen hic est.

VLIEXES

Exhibe natum et roga.

ANDROMACHA

Hue e latebris procede tuis, flebile matris furtum miserae.

1 So A: Leo aspiciat: E accipiat.
TROADES

ANDROMACHE

[Aside, while the men begin to demolish the tomb.]

What art thou doing? dost thou lay low together in common ruin both son and husband? Perhaps thou wilt be able to appease the Danaï by prayer. —But even now the huge weight of the tomb will crush the hidden boy—poor lad! let him perish no matter where, so but sire o'erwhelm not son, and son harm not sire.

[She casts herself at the knees of Ulysses.]

691 At thy knees I fall, a suppliant, Ulysses, and this hand, which no man's feet have known, I lay upon thy feet. Pity a mother, calmly and patiently listen to her pious prayers, and the higher the gods have exalted thee, the more gently bear down upon the fallen. What is given to misery is a gift to Fortune.1 So may thy chaste wife's couch see thee again; so may Laertes prolong his years till he welcome thee home once more; so may thy son succeed thee, and, by his nature's happy gifts, surpassing all your prayers, transcend his grandsire's years, his father's gifts: pity a mother. This one only comfort is left in my affliction.

ULYSSES

Produce thy son—and pray.

ANDROMACHE

[Going to the tomb, calls Astyanax.]

Hither from thy hiding-place come out, sad object of a wretched mother's theft.

[Astyanax appears from the tomb.]

1 i.e. Fortune accepts it as an offering to herself, and will repay it in the hour of your own need.
hic est, hic est terror, Vlixe, mille carinis. submitte manus
dominique pedes supplice dextra stratus adora nec turpe puta quidquid miseris fortuna iubet.
$pone$ ex animo reges atavos magnique senis iura per omnes incluta terras, excidat Hector, gere captivum positoque genu,
si tua nondum funera sentis,
matris fletus imitare tuae.
Vidit pueri regis lacrimas et Troia prior, parvusque minas trucis Alcidae flexit Priamus.
ille, ille ferox, cuius vastis
viribus omnes cessere ferae, qui perfracto limine Ditis
caecum retro patefecit iter,
hostis parvi victus lacrimis, “suscipe” dixit “rector habenas patrioque sede celsus solio;
sed sceptra fide meliore tene.”
hoc fuit illo victore capi;
discite mites Herculis iras.
an sola placent Herculis arma?
iacet ante pedes non minor illo supplice suppless vitamque petit—regnum Troiae quocumque volet Fortuna ferat.

VLIXES

Matris quidem me maeror attonitae movet,
magis Pelasgae me tamen matres movent,
quarum iste magnos crescit in luctus puer.
Here he is, Ulysses, here is the terror of a thousand ships! [To Astyanax.] Lower thy hands and, prone at thy master’s feet, pray thou with appealing touch; and deem naught base which fortune imposes on the wretched. Forget thy royal ancestry, the illustrious sway of thy noble grandsire o’er all lands, forget Hector, too; play the captive and on bended knee, if thou feelst not yet thine own doom, copy thy mother’s tears.

[She turns to Ulysses.]

Troy aforetime also saw the tears of a boy-king, and little Priam averted the threats of fierce Alcides. He, yes he, fierce warrior, to whose vast strength all savage creatures yielded, who burst through the doors of Dis and made the dark way retraceable, conquered by his small enemy’s tears, exclaimed:

“Take the reins and rule thy state, sitting high on thy father’s throne; but wield the sceptre with better faith.” This it was to be taken by such a conqueror; learn ye the merciful wrath of Hercules. Or is it the arms alone of Hercules that please thee? See, there lies at thy feet a suppliant, no less than that other suppliant, and pleads for life—as for Troy’s throne, let Fortune bear that whithersoe’er she will.

The grief of a stricken mother moves me, true, and yet the Pelasgian mothers move me more, to whose great sorrow that boy of thine is growing.

1 Hercules, having taken Troy and slain Laomedon for his breach of faith, spared little Priam, and placed him on the throne of his father.
2 i.e. if Ulysses would imitate Hercules, let it be in his mercy as well as in his power.
SENECÆ TRAGOEDIAE

ANDROMACHA

Has, has ruinás urbis in cinerem datae
hic excitabit? hae manus Troiam erigent?
nullas habet spes Troia, si tales habet.
on sic iacemus Troes, ut cuiquam metus
possimus esse. spiritus genitor facit? sed nempe tractus. ipse post Troiam pater
posuisset animos, magna quos frangunt mala.
si poena petitur, quae peti gravior potest?
famulare collo nobili subeat iugum,
servire liceat. aliquid hoc regi negat?

VLIXES

Non hoc Vlixes, sed negat Calchas tibi.

ANDROMACHA

O machinátor fraudis et scelerum artifex, virtute cuius bellica nemo occidit,
dolis et astu malesficæ mentis iacent
etiam Pelasgni, vatem et insontes deos praetendís? hoc est pectoris facinus tui.
nocturne miles, fortis in pueri necem,
iam solus audes aliquid et claro die.

VLIXES

Virtus Vlixís Danaídís nota est satis
nimisque Phrygibus. non vacat vanis diem conterere verbis; ancoras classis legit.
TROADES

ANDROMACHE

These ruins, these ruins of a city brought to dust, shall he wake to life? Shall these hands raise Troy again? Troy has no hopes if she has but such as these. Not such our overthrow ¹ that we Trojans can be a fear to any. Does thought of his father rouse pride in him? 'Twas a father dragged in the dust. That father himself after Troy's fall would have given up courage, which great misfortunes break. If revenge be sought, what greater revenge couldst thou seek? Let the yoke of bondage be placed upon his high-born neck, let a slave's lot be granted him. Does any refuse this to a prince?

ULYSES

'Tis not Ulysses, but Calchas refuses this to thee.

ANDROMACHE

O thou contriver of fraud, cunning master in crime, by whose warlike prowess none has ever fallen, by whose tricks and by the cunning of whose vicious mind even Pelasgians ² are undone, dost seek to hide behind seer and blameless gods? This is the deed of thine own heart. Thou nocturnal soldier, brave to do a mere boy to death, at last thou darest some deed alone and in the open day.

ULYSES

Ulysses' courage the Danaï know full well, and all too well the Phrygians. But leisure we lack to waste the day in empty words; the fleet is weighing anchor.

¹ i.e. we are destroyed not merely in part, but utterly.
² Iphigenia, Palamedes, Ajax, may be cited as illustrations.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ANDROMACHA

Brevem moram largire, dum officium parens nato supremum reddo et amplexu ultimo avidos dolores satio.

VLIEXES

Misereri tui utinam liceret. quod tamen solum licet, tempus moramque dabimus. arbitrio tuo implere lacrimis; fletus aerumnas levat.

ANDROMACHA

O dulce pignus, o decus lapsae domus summumque Troiae funus, o Danaum timor, genetricis o spes vana, cui demens ego laudes parentis bellicas, annos avi toties\(^1\) precabar, vota destituit deus. 770

Iliaca non tu sceptra regali potens gestabis aula, iura nec populis dabis victasque gentes sub tuum mittes ingum, non Graia caedes terga, non Pyrrhum trahes; non arma tenera parva tractabis manu sparsasque passim saltibus latis feras audax sequeris nec stato lustri die, solemne referens Troici lusus sacrum, puer citatas nobilis turmas ages; non inter aras mobili velox pede, reboante flexo concitos cornu modos, barbarica prisco templae saltatu coles. o Marte diro tristius leti genus! flebilius aliquid Hectoris magni nece muri videbunt.\(^2\)

---

\(^1\) Leo's conjecture for medios of the MSS. : Richter demens.

190
TROADES

ANDROMACHE

Generously grant a brief delay while I, his mother, do the last service to my son, and with a farewell embrace satisfy my yearning grief.

ULYSSES

Would that I might have compassion on thee; but what alone I may, I will give thee time and respite. Weep thy fill; weeping lightens woe.

ANDROMACHE [to ASTYANAX]

O sweet pledge of love, O glory of our fallen house, last loss of Troy, thou terror of the Danaï, thy mother's vain hope, for whom in my madness I used so oft to pray thy sire's war-earned praises, thy grandsire's years; God has denied my prayers. Thou shalt not with kingly might wield Ilium's sceptre in thy royal hall, shalt not give laws unto the nations, nor send conquered tribes beneath thy yoke; thou shalt not smite fleeing Greeks nor drag Pyrrhus at thy chariot-wheels. Thy slender hand shall wield no boyish weapons, nor shalt thou boldly chase the wild beasts scattered through broad forest-glades, nor on the appointed lustral day, celebrating the sacred festival of the Trojan Game,¹ shalt thou, a princely boy, lead on thy charging squadrons; nor among the altars, with swift and nimble feet, while the curved horn blares out stirring measures, shalt thou at Phrygian shrines celebrate the ancient dance. O mode of death sadder than cruel war! A sight more tearful than great Hector's death shall the walls behold.

¹ Troiae Ludus or Troia was an equestrian sham-battle said to have been popular among the boys of Troy, described by Virgil, Aeneid v. 545 ff., who traces the game as played at Rome back to this ancient source.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

VLIXES

Rumpe iam fletus, parens; magnus sibi ipse non facit finem dolor.

ANDROMACHA

Lacrimis, Vlixe, parva quam petimus mora est; concede paucas, ut mea condam manu viventis oculos. occidis parvus quidem, sed iam timendus. Troia te expectat tua; 790 i, vade liber, liberos Troas vide.

ASTYANAX

Miserere, mater.

ANDROMACHA

Quid meos retines sinus manusque matris cassa praesidia occupas? fremitu leonis qualis audito tener timidum iuvenus applicat matri latus, at ille saevus matre summota leo praeadam minorem morsibus vastis tenens frangit vehitque, talis e nostro sinu te rapiet hostis. oscula et fletus, puer, lacerosque crines excipe et plenus mei 800 occurre patri; paeca maternae tamen perfer querelae verba: "si manes habent curas priores nec perit flammis amor, servire Graio pateris Andromachen uiro, crudelis Hector? lentus et segnis iaces? redit Achilles." sume nunc iterum comas 192
TROADES

ULYSSES

Break off now thy tears, thou mother; great grief sets no limit to itself.

ANDROMACHE

For my tears, Ulysses, the respite I ask is small; grant me a few tears yet, that with my own hand I may close his eyes while he still lives. [To ASTYANAX.] Thou diest, little indeed, but already to be feared. Thy Troy awaits thee; go, depart in freedom; go, look on Trojans who are free.¹

ASTYANAX

Pity me, mother.

ANDROMACHE

Why clingest thou to my breast, and graspest the vain protection of thy mother's hands? As, when the lion's roar is heard, the young bull draws close to its mother's trembling flank, but see! the savage lion thrusts the dam away and, with huge jaws grasping the lesser booty, crushes and bears it off, so shall thy enemy snatch thee from my breast. Now, son, take my kisses and tears, take my torn locks and, full of me, hasten to thy sire. Yet bear, too, some few words of a mother's plaint: "If spirits still feel their former cares, and if love perishes not in the funeral flames, dost thou permit Andromache to serve a Greek lord, O cruel Hector? Indifferent and sluggish dost thou lie? Achilles has come back." Take now once again these locks, and take these ¹ i.e. the boy is to join his kinsmen who have died free rather than to live enslaved.

SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

et sume lacrimas, quidquid e misero viri funere relictum est, sume quae reddas tuo oscula parenti. matris hanc solacio relinque vestem; tumulus hanc tetigit meus manesque cari. si quod hic cineris latet, scrutabor ore.

VLIXES

Nullus est flendi modus—abripite propere classis Argolicae moram.

CHORVS

Quae vocat sedes habitanda captas?
Thessali montes et opaca Tempe,
an viros tellus dare militares aptior Phthie meliorque fetu fortis armenti lapidosa Trachin,
an maris vasti domitrix Iolcos?
urbibus centum spatiosa Crete,
parva Gortynis sterilisque Tricce,
an frequens rivis levibus Mothone
quae sub Oetaeis latebrosa silvis misit infestos Troiae ruinis non semel arcus?
Olenos tectis habitata raris,
virgini Pleuron inimica divae,
an maris lati·sinuosa Troezen?
Pelion regnum Prothoi superbum, tertius caelo gradus? (hic recumbens montis exesi spatiösus antro
iam trucis Chiron pueri magister,
TROADES

tears, all that is left from my poor husband’s funeral, take kisses to deliver to thy sire. This cloak leave as comfort for thy mother; my tomb has touched it, and my beloved shades. If any of his dust is hidden here, I’ll hunt it with my lips.

ULYSSES [to his attendants]

There is no limit to her weeping—away with this hindrance to the Argive fleet.

[Exeunt Ulysses and his attendants, the former leading the little Astyanax.]

CHORUS

What place of dwelling calls to our captive band? Thessalian mountains and Tempe’s shady vale, or Phthia, a land more fitted to produce warriors, and rocky Trachin, famous for its breed of brave herds, or Iolchos, the vast sea’s mistress? Crete, spacious with her hundred towns, little Gortynis and barren Tricce, or Mothone, abounding in tiny rills, the land of caves beneath Oeta’s wooded heights which sent not once only to Troy’s fall the deadly bow? Olenos, land of scattered homes, Pleuron, which the virgin goddess hates, or Troezen, on the broad sea’s curving shore? Pelion, proud kingdom of Prothous, third step to heaven? (Here, reclining at full length within his hollowed mountain cave, Chiron, tutor of a youth already pitiless, with his quill striking

1 It was from Iolchos that the Argo sailed on its conquest of the sea. See Medea, 596.
2 i.e. of Hercules, who took Troy by the aid of his bow and arrows, and later, dying on Mount Oeta, gave them to Philoctetes, who with them assisted in the second fall of Troy.
3 Diana, who hated this and all Aetolian towns for the sake of Oeneus, king of Calydon, who had slighted her divinity.
4 See Index s. v. “Pelion.”
5 Achilles.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

tinnulas plectro feriente chordas, tune quoque ingentes acuebat iras bella canendo.)
An ferax varii lapidis Carystos,
an premens litus maris inquietu
semper Euripo properante Chaleis?
quolibet vento faciles Calyndae,
an carens numquam Gonoessa vento
quaeque formidat Borean Enispe?
Attica pendens Peparethos ora,
an sacris gaudens tacitis Eleusin?
numquid Aiacis Salamina\(^1\) veram\(^2\)
aut fera notam Calydona saeva, quasque perfundit subiturus aequor
seg nibus terras Titaressos undis?
Bessan et ScarpHen, Pylon an senilem?
Pharin an Pisas Iovis et coronis Elida claram?

Quolibet tristis miser.as procella
mittat et donet cuicumque terrae, dum luem tantam Troiae atque Achivis
quae tulit, Sparte, procul absit, absit Argos et saevi Pelopis Myce.nae, Neritos parva brevior Zae.nyntho et nocens saxis Ithace dolosis.

Quod manet fatum dominusque quis te, aut quibus terris, Hecuba, videndam
ducet? in cuius morire regno?

\(^1\) The abrupt change of construction in the names of the places here following suggests the loss of some words in this passage.
Scaliger conjectures: quove iactatae pelago feremur | exules?
ad quae locis, quas ad urbes?

\(^2\) So Scaliger: Leo veri, with MSS. It is vera as opposed to the new Salamis founded by Teucer in Cyprus.
out tinkling chords, even then whetted the boy's mighty passions by songs of war.) Or Carystos, rich in many-hued marble, or Chalcis, hard by the shore of the restless sea, where Euripus' racing tides even flow? Calydrae, easy of approach in any wind, or Gonoëssa, never free from winds, and Enispe, which shivers before the northern blast? Peparethos, lying close to the Attic shore, or Eleusin, rejoicing in her sacred mysteries? Shall we to the true Salamis, home of Ajax, or to Calydon, famed for the wild boar, or to those lands which the Titaressos bathes, destined to flow with its sluggish waters beneath the sea? or to Bessa, and Scarphe, or Pylos, the old man's home? to Pharis or Pisae, sacred to Jupiter, and Elis, famed for victors' crowns?

651 Let the mournful blasts bear our misery where'er they list and give us to any land if only Sparta, which brought such woe on Troy and the Greeks alike, be far away, and far away be Argos, and Mycenae, home of savage Pelops, and Neritos, smaller than small Zacynthos, and baleful Ithaca with her crafty crags.

859 What fate, what lord waits for thee, Hecuba, or to what land will he lead thee to be a public show? In whose kingdom shalt thou die?

[Enter Helen.]

1 Thessaly.
2 This river, a sluggish affluent of the Peneus, was said to have its rise in the Styx, and plunged beneath the sea on its way thither again.
3 Nestor
4 Two small islands near Ithaca, ruled by Ulysses.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

HELENA

Quicumque hymen funestus, inlaetabilis
lamenta caedes sanguinem gemitus habet est auspice Helena dignus. eversis quoque nocere cogor Phrygibus. ego Pyrrhi toros narrare falsos iubeor, ego cultus dare habiturs Graios. arte capietur mea meaque fraud fricet Paridis soror.
fallatur; ipsi levius hoc equidem reor;
optanda mors est sine metu mortis mori.
quid iussa cessas agere? ad auctorem redit
sceleris coacti culpa.

Dardaniae domus
generosa virgo, melior afflictos deus respicere coepit teque felici parat dotare thalamo; tale coniugium tibi
non ipsa sospes Troia, non Priamus daret.
nam te Pelasg ae maximum gentis decus, cui regna campi lata Thessalici patent,\(^1\)
ad sancta lecti iura legitimi petit.\(^878\)
te magna Tethys teque tot pelagi deae placidumque numen aequoris tumidi Thetis\(^880\)
suam vocabunt, te datam Pyrrho socer Peleus nurum vocabit et Nereus nurum.
depone cultus squalidos, festos cape,
dedisce captam; deprime horrentes comas
crinemque docta patere distinguui manu.
hic forsitan te casus excelso magis
solio reponet. profuit multis capi.

\(^1\) Lines 877 and 878 were transposed by Swoboda.
TROADES

HELEN [aside]

Whatever wedlock, calamitous, joyless, has mourning, murder, blood, and lamentations, is worthy of Helen's auspices. Even in their ruin am I driven to be the Phrygians' bane. It is my task to tell a false tale of marriage with Pyrrhus; mine, to dress the bride in Grecian fashion; by my craft she will be snared and by my treachery will the sister of Paris fall. Let her be deceived; for her I deem this the easier lot; 'tis a death desirable, to die without the fear of death. Why dost hesitate to execute thy orders? To its author returns the blame of a crime compelled.

[To Polyxena.]

Thou noble maid of the house of Dardanus, in more kindly wise doth heaven begin to regard the afflicted, and makes ready to dower thee with a happy bridal; such a match neither Troy herself while still secure, nor Priam, could make for thee. For the greatest ornament of the Pelasgian race, whose realm stretches wide over the plains of Thessaly, seeks thee in holy bonds of lawful wedlock. Thee will great Tethys call her own, thee, all the goddesses of the deep, and Thetis, calm deity of the swelling sea; wedded to Pyrrhus, Peleus as thy father-in-law shall call thee daughter, and Nereus shall call thee daughter. Put off thy mournful garb, don festal array, forget thou art a captive; smooth thy unkempt locks, and suffer my skilled hand to part thy hair. This fall, perchance, will restore thee to a more exalted throne. Many have profited by captivity.

1 i.e. of Polyxena.
2 It was in accordance with Roman custom to part the bride's hair into six locks.
Hoc derat unum Phrygibus eversis malum—gaudere. flagrant strata passim Pergama—coniugale tempus! an quisquam audeat negare? quisquam dubius ad thalamos eat, quos Helena suadet? pestis exitium lues utriusque populi, cernis hos tumulos ducum et nuda totis ossa quae passim iacent inhumata campis? haec hymen sparsit tuus, tibi fluxit Asiae, fluxit Europae cruer,
cum dimicantes laeta prospeceres viros,
incerta voti. perge, thalamos appara.
taedis quid opus est quidve solemni face?
quid igne? thalamis Troia praelueet novis.
celebrate Pyrrhi, Troades, conubia,
celebrate digne: planctus et gemitus sonet.

Ratione quamvis careat et flecti neget magnus dolor sociosque nonnumquam sui maeroris ipsos oderit, causam tamen possum tueri iudice infesto meam, graviora passa. laeget Andromacha Hectorum et Hecuba Priamum; solus occulte Paris lugendus Helenae est. durum et invisum et grave
est
servitia ferre? patior hoc olim iugum,
annis decem captiva. prostratum Ilium est,
versi penates? perdere est patriam grave,
gravius timere. vos levat tanti mali
comitatus; in me victor et victus furit.
quam quisque famulam traheret incerto diu
casu pepeudit; me meus traxit statim
TROADES

ANDROMACHE

This one woe was lacking to the ruined Phrygians—to rejoice. Pergama’s ruins lie blazing all around—fit time for marriage! Would any dare refuse? Would any hesitate to go to a bridal when Helen invites? Thou plague, destruction, pest of both peoples, seest thou these tombs of chieftains, the bare bones which everywhere lie unentombed o’er all the plain? These has thy marriage scattered. For thee has flowed Asia’s, has flowed Europe’s blood, whilst thou gleefully didst look out upon thy warring husbands with wavering prayer. Go on, make ready thy marriages! What need of pine-brands, what of the solemn nuptial torch, what need of fire? For this strange marriage Troy furnishes the torch. Ye Trojan dames, celebrate Pyrrhus’ nuptials, celebrate them worthily: let blows and groans resound.

HELEN

Although great grief lacks reason and will not be turned aside, and sometimes hates the very comrades of its suffering, still could I maintain my cause even before a hostile judge, having borne worse things than you. Andromache mourns for her Hector, and Hecuba for her Priam; for Paris alone must Helen mourn in secret. Is it a hard, a hateful, and a galling thing to endure servitude? This yoke have I long endured, for ten years captive. Is Ilium laid low, are your household gods overthrown? It is hard to lose one’s native country, harder to fear it. You are comforted by companionship in so great misfortune; against me victor and vanquished rage alike. Which one of you each lord should drag away as his slave, has long hung on uncertain chance; me has sine sorte dominus. causa bellorum fui tantaeque Teucris cladis? hoc verum puta, Spartana puppis vestra si secuit freta; sin rapta Phrygiis praeda remigibus fui deditque donum iudici victrix dea, ignosce praedae. iudicem iratum mea habitura causa est; ista Menelaum manent arbitria. nunc hanc luctibus paulum tuis, Andromacha, omissis flecte—vix lacrimas queo retinere.

ANDROMACHA

Quantum est Helena quod lacrimat malum. cur lacrimat autem? fare quos Ithacus dolos, quae scelera nectat; utrum ab Idaeis iugis iactanda virgo est, arcis an celsae edito mittenda saxo? num per has vastum in mare volvenda rupes, latere quas scisso levat altum vadoso Sigeon spectans sinu? dic, fare, quidquid subdolo vultu tegis. leviora mala sunt cuncta, quam Priami gener Hecubaeque Pyrrhus. fare, quam poenam pares exprome et unum hoc deme nostris cladibus: falli. paratas perpeti mortem vides.

HELENA

Vtinam iuberet me quoque interpres deum abrumpere ense lucis invisae moras vel Achillis ante busta furibunda manu occidere Pyrrhi, fata comitantem tua, Polyxene miseranda, quam tradi sibi cineremque Achilles ante mactari suum, campo maritus ut sit Elysio, iubet.
my master dragged away at once, without waiting for the lot. Have I been the cause of wars and all this ruin to the Teucrians? Count that the truth if 'twas a Spartan ship that clove your seas; but if, swept along by Phrygian oarsmen, I was a helpless prey, if a triumphant goddess gave me as a reward to her judge, pity the helpless prey. 'Tis an angry judge my cause will have; the decision of that case waits on Menelaüs. But now forget your own woes a little while, Andromache, and prevail on her—I can scarce keep from weeping.

ANDROMACHE

How great must be the woe for which Helen weeps! But why weep? Tell us what tricks, what crimes the Ithacan is devising. Must the maiden be cast down from Ida's crags or thrown from the lofty citadel's high rock? Must she be hurled into the vasty deep over these cliffs which lofty Sigeum with sheer sides raises, looking out on his shallow bay? Speak, speak, whatever it is thou hidest beneath thy lying looks. All woes are easier to bear than that Pyrrhus be son-in-law to Hecuba and Priam. Tell us, explain what suffering thou hast in hand, and subtract this one from our calamities—ignorance of our fate. Thou seest us ready to suffer death.

HELEN

Would that the prophet of the gods bade me, too, end with the sword this lingering, hateful life, or fall before Achilles' tomb by the mad hand of Pyrrhus, a companion of thy fate, poor Polyxena, whom Achilles bids be given to him, and be sacrificed in presence of his ashes, that in the Elysian fields he may wed with thee.

1 Polyxena.
Vide ut animus ingens laetus audierit necem. cultus decoros regiae vestis petit et ad moveri crinibus patitur manum. mortem putabat illud, hoc thalamos putat. at misera luctu mater audito stupet; labefacta mens succubuit. assurge, alleva animum et cadentem, misera, firma spiritum. Quam tenuis anima vinculo pendet levi! minimum est quod Hecubam facere felicem potest. spirat, revixit. prima mors miseros fugit.

HECVBA

Adhuc Achilles vivit in poenas Phrygum? adhuc rebellat? o manum Paridis levem. cinis ipse nostrum sanguinem ac tumulus sitit. modo turba felix latera cingebat mea, lassabar in tot oscula et tantum gregem dividere matrem; sola nunc haec est super votum, comes, levamen afflictae, quies; haec totus Hecubae fetus, hac sola vocor iam voce mater. dura et infelix age elabere anima, denique hoc unum mihi remitte funus. inrigat fetus genas imberque victo subitus e vultu cadit.
TROADES

ANDROMACHE

See with what joy her mighty soul has heard her doom! The becoming attire of royal robes she seeks, and allows Helen's hand to approach her locks. Death she deemed that other, this, her bridal. But, hearing the woeful news, her wretched mother is in a daze; her tottering reason has given way. Arise, lift up thy courage, poor queen, strengthen thy fainting spirit.

[HECUBA falls in a faint.]

On how slender a thread her frail life hangs! But very little lacks to bring—happiness to Hecuba. She breathes, she lives again. 'Tis the wretched that death first flees.

HECUBA

Does Achilles still live for vengeance on the Phrygians? Does he still war against them? O hand of Paris, too light! His very ashes and his tomb thirst for our blood. But late a happy throng of children girt me round, and I grew weary of sharing a mother's love among so many kisses and so large a flock; but now this daughter alone is left, object of my prayer, my companion, comfort in affliction, my resting-place; she is Hecuba's entire offspring, hers is the only voice that now calls me mother. O obstinate, unhappy soul, come, slip away, and spare me the sight of this one death at least. Tears overflow my cheeks and from my vanquished eyes a sudden shower falls.

1 Hecuba has been present during this scene, up to this time as a persona muta.
2 Paris should have slain Achilles past all resurrection.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ANDROMACHA

Nos Hecuba, nos, nos, Hecuba, lugendae sumus, quas mota classis huc et hue sparsas feret;
hanc cara tellus sedibus patriis teget.

HELENA

Magis invidebis, si tuam sortem scies.

ANDROMACHA

An aliqua poenae pars meae ignota est mihi?

HELENA

Versata dominos urna captivis dedit.

ANDROMACHA

Cui famula trador? ede; quem dominum voco?

HELENA

Te sorte prima Scyrius iuvenis tulit.

ANDROMACHA

Cassandra felix, quam furor sorti eximit Phoebusque.

HELENA

Regum hanc maximus rector tenet.

HECUBA

Laetare, gaude, nata. quam vellet tuos
Cassandra thalamos, vellet Andromache tuos.
estne aliquis, Hecubam qui suam dici velit?

1 Leo follows Richter in placing ll. 967, 968 after 978.
TROADES

ANDROMACHE

'Tis we, Hecuba, we, we, Hecuba, who should be mourned, whom the fleet, once started on its way, will scatter to every land; but her the dear soil of her native land will cover.

HELEN

Still more wilt thou envy her when thine own lot thou knowest.

ANDROMACHE

Is any part of my suffering still unknown to me?

HELEN

The urn has whirled and to the captives given lords.

ANDROMACHE

To whom am I given as slave? Speak! Whom do I call master?

HELEN

Thee, by the first lot, the youth 1 of Scyros gained.

ANDROMACHE

Fortunate Cassandra, whom madness and Phoebus from the lot exempt.

HELEN

Her the most mighty king of kings receives.

HECUBA [to POLYXENA]

Rejoice and be glad, my daughter! How would Cassandra, how would Andromache long for thy marriage! [To HELEN.] Is there anyone who would have Hecuba called his?

1 Pyrrhus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

HELENA

Ithaco obtigisti praeda nolenti brevis. 980

HECUBA

Quis tam impotens ac durus et iniquae ferus sortitor urnae regae reges dedit?
quis tam sinister dividit captas deus?
quos arbiter crudelis et miseris gravis eligere dominos nescit et matrem Hectoris armis Achillis miscet? ad Vlixen vocor;
nunc victa, nunc captiva, nunc cunctis mihi obsessa videor cladibus—domini pudet, non servitutis.¹ sterilis et saevis fretis inclusa tellus non capiit tumulos meos—duc, duc, Vlixe, nil moror, dominum sequor;
me mea sequentur fata: non pelago quies tranquilla veniet, saeviet ventis mare,² et bella et ignes et mea et Priami mala.
dumque ista veniant, interim hoc poenae loco est—sortem occupavi, praemium eripui tibi.

Sed en citato Pyrrhus accurrit gradu vultuque torvo. Pyrhe, quid cessas? age reclude ferro pectus et Achillis tui coniungeo socios. perge, maculator seinnu, et hic decet te sanguis. abreptam trahe.

¹ Richter incorporates (bracketed) in his text at this point a line which Leo deletes:
Eligere dominos nescit et [saeva manu dat iniqua miseris fata] quis] matrem Hectoris and again at l. 990:

non servitutis. [Hectoris spolium feret qui tulit Achillis?] sterilis et saevis fretis

² Leo thinks that some such additional line as the following is required by the sense: sociosque merget, obruent reducem quoque.
To the Ithacan, against his will, hast thou fallen, a short-lived prize.

Who so reckless and unfeeling, who so cruelly drawing lots from an unjust urn hath given royalty to royalty? What god so perverse apportions the captives? What arbiter, heartless and hard to the unfortunate, so blindly chooses our lords, and unites Hector's mother to Achilles' arms? To Ulysses am I summoned; now indeed do I seem vanquished, now captive, now beset by all disasters—'tis the master shames me, not the servitude. That barren land, hemmed in by stormy seas, does not contain my tomb—lead, lead on, Ulysses, I hold not back, I follow my master; but me my fates shall follow: upon the deep no calm peace shall come; the sea shall rage with the winds and engulf thy comrades; and thee, e'en when safe home again, shall wars and fires, my own and Priam's evil fortunes, o'erwhelm. And till those shall come, meanwhile this serves in place of vengeance on thee—I have usurped thy lot, I have stolen from thee thy prize.

But see, Pyrrhus approaches with hurried step and grim countenance. Pyrrhus, why dost thou hesitate? Come, plunge thy sword into my breast, and so unite the parents of thy Achilles' bride. Proceed, thou murderer of old men, this blood of mine also becomes thee. [Pointing to Polyxena.] Seize!

1 After Achilles' death his arms had been awarded to Ulysses.
2 i.e. the place of her burial does not lie in Ithaca, since she will die before reaching it.
3 Translating Leo's conjecture.
4 i.e. Ulysses can have but one choice, and this, instead of being a beautiful young woman, has turned out an ugly old hag.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

maculate superos caede funesta deos, maculate manes—quid precer vobis? precor
his digna sacris aequora; hoc classi accidat toti Pelasgae, ratibus hoc mille accidat meae precabor, cum vehar, quidquid rati.

CHORVS

Dulce maerenti populus dolentum,
dulce lamentis resonare gentes;
lenius luctus lacrimacque mordent,
turba quas fletu similis frequentat.
semper a semper dolor est malignus;
gaudet in multos sua fata mitti
seque non solum placuisse poenae.
ferre quam sortem patiuntur omnes,
nemo recusat.

Tolle felices: miserum, licet sit,
nemo se credet. removete multo divites auro, removete centum rura qui scindunt opulenta bubus:
pauperi surgent animi iacentes.
est miser nemo nisi comparatus.
dulce in immensis posito ruinis,
neminem laetos habuisse vultus;
ille deplorat queriturque fatum,
qui secans fluctum rate singulari
nudus in portus cecidit petitos.
eaquior casum tulit et procellas,
mille qui ponto pariter carinas
obrui vidit tabulaque vectus naufraga, terris mare dum coactis fluctibus Corus prohibet, revertit.
questus est Hellen cecidisse Phrixus, cum gregis ductor radiante villo
aureo fratrem simul ac sororem

210
TROADES

drag her hence! Defile, ye Greeks, the gods above with deadly slaughter, defile the shades below—nay, why pray to you? I pray for seas that befit such rites as these; may such doom befall the whole fleet of the Pelasgians, may such befall their thousand ships, as I shall call down on my own when I set sail.

CHORUS

Sweet to the mourner is a host of mourners, sweet to hear multitudes in lamentation; lighter is the sting of wailing and of tears which a like throng accompanies. Ever, ah, ever is grief malicious; glad is it that its own fate comes on many, and that it alone is not appointed unto suffering. To bear the lot which all endure none can refuse.

Remove the fortunate: unfortunate though he be, none will so think himself. Remove those blest with heaps of gold, remove those who plough rich fields with a hundred oxen: the downcast spirits of the poor will rise again. No one is unfortunate save as compared with others. 'Tis sweet to one set in widespread desolation to see no one with joyful countenance; but he deplores and complains of his hard fortune who, while he cleaves the waves in solitary vessel, has been flung naked into the harbour he had sought. More calmly has he endured the tempest and disaster who has seen a thousand vessels engulfed by the selfsame billows and who comes back, borne on a piece of wreckage, to safety, while Corus,2 controlling the waves, forbids their onslaught on the land. Phrixus mourned because Helle fell, when the flock's leader, resplendent with golden fleece, bore brother and sister on his back

1 i.e. savage.
2 The north-west wind.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

sustulit tergo medioque iactum
fecit in ponto; tenuit querelas et vir et Pyrrha, mare cum viderent,
et nihil praeter mare cum viderent
unici terris homines relict.

Solvet hunc questum lacrimasque nostras
sparget hue illuc agitata classis, cum 1 tuba iussi dare vela nautae et 1 simul ventis properante remo prenderint altum fugietque litus.
quis status mentis miseris, ubi omnis
terra decrescet pelagusque crescit, celsa cum longe latitabit Ide?
tum puer matri genetrixque nato, Troia qua iaceat regione monstrans,
dicet et longe digito notabit:
"Ilium est illic, ubi fumus alte serpit in caelum nebulaeque turpes."
Troes hoc signo patriam videbunt.

NVNTIVS

O dura fata, sacva miseranda horrida!
quod tam ferum, tam triste bis quinis scelus Mars vidit annis? quid prius referens gemam, tuosne potius, an tuos luctus, anus?

HECUBA

Quoscumque luctus fleveris, flebis meos;
sua quemque tantum, me omnium clades premit;
mihi cuncta pereunt: quisquis est Hecubae est miser.

1 So Richter; Leo reads with ω: et tuba ... cum simul, and suggests that some such expression as the following is necessary here: caede cum pontus fuerit piatus.
together, and in mid-sea lost half his burden; but both Pyrrha and her husband ¹ checked their mourning, though they saw the sea, and saw nothing else than sea, left as they were sole remnants of the human race on earth.

But the fleet driven this way and that will separate these our laments and scatter our tears, when once the sailors, by the trumpet bidden to spread sail, shall gain the deep, by winds and speeding oarage, and the shore shall flee away. What will be the wretched captives’ feelings when all the land shall dwindle and the sea loom large, and lofty Ida shall vanish in the distance? Then son to mother, mother to her son, pointing to the place where Troy lies prostrate, will mark it afar with pointing finger, saying: “Yonder is Ilium where the smoke curls high to heaven, where the foul vapours hang.” The Trojans by that sign only will see their fatherland.

[Enter messenger.]

MESSENGER

O cruel fate, harsh, pitiable, horrible! What crime so savage, so grievous, has Mars seen in ten long years? Which first shall I tell amidst my lamentations, thy woes, Andromache, or thine, thou aged woman?

HECUBA

Whosesoever woes thou weeppest, thou wilt weep mine. Each feels the weight of his own disaster only, but I the disasters of them all; for me do all things perish. Whoever is unfortunate is Hecuba’s.

¹ Deucalion.
Mactata virgo est, missus e muris puer sed uterque letum mente generosa tulit.

Expone seriem caedis, et duplex nefas persequere; gaudet magnus aerumacias dolor tractare totas. ede et enarra omnia.
The maiden is slain; thrown from the walls the boy. But each met doom with noble spirit.

Expound their deaths in order and relate the twofold crime; great grief hath joy to dwell on all its woes. Out with it, tell us all the tale.

There is one high tower left of Troy, much used by Priam; upon its battlements and lofty pinnacles he would sit watching the war and directing the embattled lines. On this tower, nestling his grandson in his fond arms, when Hector with sword and torch pursued the Danaï fleeing in abject fear, the old man would point out to the lad his father's battles. Around this tower, once famous, the glory of the walls, but now a solitary ruin, on all sides pours a throng of chiefs and commons, encircling it. The whole host, leaving the ships, assembles here. For some, a far-off hill gives a clear view of the open space; for others, a high cliff, on whose top the eager crowd stands on tiptoe balanced. A pine-tree holds one, a laurel-tree, another, a beech-tree, one; and the whole forest sways with clinging people. One climbs to the highest peak of a steep mountain, another seeks a smouldering roof or stands on an overhanging stone of a crumbling wall, and one (oh, shame!) sits heartlessly to view the show from Hector's tomb.

Now along the plain, on every hand thronged with people, with stately step the Ithacan makes his way, leading by the hand the little grandson of Priam; and with no lagging step does the boy
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ad alta pergit moenia. ut summa stetit pro turre, vultus huc et huc acres tulit intrepidus animo. qualis ingentis ferae parvus tenerque fetus et nondum potens saevire dente iam tamen tollit minas morsusque inanes temptat atque animis tumet;
sic ille dextra prensus hostili puer
ferox superbit. moverat vulgum ac duces
ipsumque Vlixen. non flet e turba omnium qui fletur; ac, dum verba fatidici et preces concipit Vlixes vatis et saevos ciet ad sacra superos, sponte desiluit sua
in media Priami regna—

ANDROMACHA

Quis Colchus hoc, quis sedis incertae Scytha commisit, aut quae Caspium tangens mare gens iuris expers ausa? non Busiridis puerilis aras sanguis aspersit feri, nec parva gregibus membra Diomedes suis epulanda posuit. quis tuos artus leget tumuloque tradet?

NVNTIVS

Quos enim praecceps locus
reliquit artus? ossa disiecta et gravi elisa casu; signa clari corporis,
et ora et illas nobiles patris notas,
confudit imam pondus ad terram datum;
soluta cervix silicis impulsu, caput ruptum cerebro penitus expresso—iacet deforme corpus.

1 Leo: superbe MSS.
approach the lofty walls. When he stood on the tower's summit, he turned his keen gaze now here, now there, undaunted in spirit. As the cub of some great beast, tiny and young, not yet strong enough to do injury with its fangs, still bristles, bites harmlessly, and swells with rage; so the boy, though in his enemy's grasp, was proudly bold. He had moved the crowd to tears, and the chieftains, and even Ulysses. Of all the throng he alone, for whom they wept, wept not; and while Ulysses rehearsed the words and prayers appointed by the fate-revealing priest, and summoned the cruel gods to the sacrifice, of his own will leaped the boy down into the midst of Priam's kingdom—

ANDROMACHE

What Colchian, what Scythian of shifting home e'er committed crime like this, or what tribe to law unknown by the Caspian sea has dared it? No blood of children stained the altars of Busiris, cruel though he was, nor did Diomedes set limbs of babes for his herds to feast on. Who will take up thy limbs and consign them to the tomb?

MESSENGER

What limbs has that steep place left? His bones were crushed and scattered by the heavy fall; the familiar marks of his noble form, his face, the illustrious likeness of his sire, have been disfigured by his body's weight plunging to earth below; his neck was broken by the crash upon the rock, his skull was crushed, his brains dashed out—he lies a shapeless corpse.

1 Calchas.
2 See Index s.v. "Diomedes."
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ANDROMACHA

Sic quoque est similis patri.

NVNTIVS

Praecepts ut altis cecidit e muris puer
flevitque Achivum turba quod fecit nefas,
idem ille populus aliud ad facinus redit 1120
tumulumque Achillis. cuius extremum latus Rhoeeta leni verberant fluctu vada;
adversa cingit campus et clivo levi
erecta medium vallis includens locum.
crescit theatri more concursus frequens,
implevit omne litus. hi classis moram
hac morte solvi rentur, hi stirpem hostium gaudent recidi. magna pars vulgi levis odit scelus, spectatque. nec Troes minus suum frequentant funus et pavidi metu
partem ruentis ultimam Troiae vident;
cum subito thalami more praeecedunt faces et pronuba illi Tyndaris, maestum caput demissa. "tali nubat Hermione modo" Phryges precantur, "sic viro turpis suo reddatur Helena." terror attonitos tenet utrosque populos. ipsa deiectos gerit vultus pudore, sed tamen fulgent genae
magisque solito splendet extremus decor, 1130 ut esse Phoebi dulcius lumen solet
iamiam cadentis, astra cum repetunt vices premiturque dubius nocte vicina dies.
stupet omne vulgus, et fere cuncti magis
peritura laudant. hos movet formae decus,
TROADES

ANDROMACHE

So also is he like his sire.

MESSENGER

After the boy fell headlong from the lofty tower, and the throng of Greeks wept for the crime it wrought, that same host turned to a second crime and to Achilles' tomb. Its further side is gently lapped by Rhoeteum's waters; its front is surrounded by a plain, while a valley, sloping gently up, hems in the middle space. The surging mass increases as if thronging to a theatre and has filled all the shore. Some think that by this death the fleet's delay is ended; some joy that the foeman's stock is cut away; the greater part of the heedless mob detest the crime—and gaze. Nor any less do the Trojans throng their own funeral and, quaking with fear, look on at the last act of the fall of Troy; when suddenly, as at a wedding, the torches come, leading the way, and the daughter 1 of Tyndareus as the bride's attendant, with sad and drooping head. "So may Hermione 2 be wed," the Phrygians pray; "in such wise may base Helen to her husband be given back." Terror holds both peoples awe-struck. The maid herself comes on with eyes in modesty cast down, but yet her face is radiant and the dying splendour of her beauty shines beyond its wont; as Phoebus' light is wont to appear more glorious at the moment of his setting, when the stars come back to their stations and the uncertain daylight is dimmed by the approach of night. Astonished gazes the whole multitude, for all ever admire the more what must soon pass from them. Some, her beauty

1 Helen. 2 Daughter of Helen and Menelaüs.
hos mollis aetas, hos vagae rerum vices;
move animus omnes fortis et leto obvius.
Pyrrhum antecedit; omnium mentes tremunt,
mirantur ac miserantur. ut primum ardui
sublime montis tetigit atque alte edito iuvenis paterni vertice in busti stetit, audax virago non tulit retro gradum;
conversa ad iictum stat truci vultu ferox.
tam fortis animus omnium mentes ferit
novumque monstrum est Pyrrhus ad caedem piger.
ut dextra ferrum penitus exacta abdidit,
subitus recepta morte prorupit cruor per vulnus ingens. nec tamen moriens adhuc deponit animos; cecidit, ut Achilli gravem factura terram, prona et irato impetu.
eterque flevit coetus; at timidum Phryges
misere gemitum, clarius victor gemit.
hic ordo sacri. non stetit fusus cruor humove summa fluxit; obduxit statim saevusque totum sanguinem tumulus bibit.

HECVBA

Ite, ite, Danai, petite iam tuti domos;
optata velis maria diffusis secet
secura classis. concidit virgo ac puer;
bellum peractum est. quo meas lacrimas feram?
ubi hanc anilis expuam leti moram?
natam an nepotem, coniugem an patriam fleam?
an omnia an me sola? mors votum meum,
infantibus, violenta, virginibus venis,

220
TROADES

moves; some, her tender youth; some, the shifting changes of her fortune; but one and all, her courage, dauntless and death-confronting. On she comes and Pyrrhus follows; the hearts of all are filled with terror, wonder, pity. Soon as the young man reached the summit of the steep mound, and stood upon the high-raised top of his father’s tomb, the dauntless maid did not shrink back, but, facing the stroke, stood there with stern look and courageous. A spirit so bold strikes the hearts of all and—strange prodigy—Pyrrhus is slow to kill. When his hand, thrust forth, had buried deep the sword, with the death-stroke her blood leaped out in a sudden stream through the gaping wound. Yet, though in the very act of death, she put not by her spirit; she fell, as if thus to make the earth heavy on Achilles, prone and with angry thud. The throng of both peoples wept; but the Phrygians mourned her with timid lamentation, while the victors wailed aloud. Thus was the rite performed. The shed blood stayed not nor flowed off on the surface of the ground; instantly the savage mound sucked it down and drank the whole draught of gore.

HECUBA

Go, go, ye Danaï, seek now your homes in safety; let your fleet now spread its sails and at ease plough the longed-for sea. A maiden and a boy have fallen; the war is done. But I, whither shall I betake my tears? Where in my old age shall I spew out this lingering life? Daughter or grandson, husband or country—which shall I lament? Shall I mourn all or, in my loneliness, myself alone? O death, object of my prayer, to boys and girls everywhere thou com’st with speed and savage violence;
ubique properas, saeva; me solam times - vitasque, gladios inter ac tela et faces quaesita tota nocte, cupientem fugis. non hostis aut ruina, non ignis meos absumpsit artus; quam prope a Priamo steti.

NVNTIVS

Repetite celeri maria, captivae, gradu; iam vela puppis laxat et classis movet.
me alone dost thou fear and shun; sought midst swords and spears and firebrands the livelong night, thou dost evade my eager search. No foe, no falling wall, no fire has consumed my limbs; and yet how near to Priam did I stand!

MESSENGER

Haste to the sea, ye captives; already the vessels are spreading sail and the fleet is off.
DRAMATIS PERSONAE

Medea, daughter of Aeëtes, king of Colchis, and wife of Jason.

Jason, son of Aeson, and nephew of Pelias, the usurping king of Thessaly; organizer and leader of the Argonautic expedition to Colchis in quest of the Golden Fleece.

Creon, king of Corinth, who had received into his hospitable kingdom Medea and Jason, fugitives from Thessaly, after Medea had plotted the death of Pelias.

Nurse of Medea.

Messenger.

Two Sons of Medea and Jason (personae mutae).

Chorus of Corinthians, friendly to Jason and hostile to Medea.

The Time of the play is confined to the single day of the culmination of the tragedy, the day proposed by Creon for the banishment of Medea and the marriage of Jason to Creusa, daughter of Creon.

The Scene is in Corinth, in the court of the house of Jason.
ARGUMENT

Although the play is confined in time to the final day of catastrophe at Corinth, the background is the whole romantic story of the Argonauts: how Jason and his hero-comrades, at the instigation of Pelias, the usurping king of Thessalian Iolchos, undertook the first voyage in quest of the Golden Fleece; how, after many adventures, these first sailors reached the kingdom of Aeëtes, who jealously guarded the fleece, since upon its possession depended his own kingship; how the three deadly labours were imposed upon Jason before the fleece could be won—the yoking of the fiereswulls, the contest with the giants that sprang from their own serpent’s teeth, and the overcoming of the sleepless dragon that ever guarded the fleece; how, smitten by love of him, the beautiful barbaric Medea, daughter of the king, by the help of her magic aided Jason in all these labours and accompanied him in his flight; how to retard her father’s pursuit she slew her brother and scattered his mangled remains in the path as they fled; how again, for love of Jason, she restored his father to youth and tricked Pelias’ own daughters into slaying their aged sire; how, for this act, Medea with her husband were exiled from Thessalia and dwelt in Corinth; how, for ten happy years, she lived with her husband and two sons in this alien land, her wild past almost forgotten, her magic untouched.

But now Jason has been won away from his wife, and is about to wed Creusa, the daughter of Creon, king of Corinth. The wedding festivities have already begun when the play opens and reveals Medea invoking all the powers of heaven and hell in punishment of her false lord.
MEDEA

Di coniugales tuque genialis tori,
Lucina, custos, quaeque domituram freta
Tiphyn novam frenare dociuisti ratem, et tu, profundi saeve dominator maris,
clarumque Titan dividens orbi diem,
tacitisque praebens conselium sacris iubar Hecate triformis, quosque iteravit mihi deos Iason, quosque Medeae magis fas est precari—noctis aeternae chaos, aversa superis regna manesque impios dominumque regni tristis et dominam fide meliore raptam, voce non fausta precor.
nunc, nunc adeste, sceleris ultrices deae,
criem solutis squalidae serpentibus,
atum cruentis manibus amplexae facem,
adeste, thalamis horridae quondam meis quales stetistis; coniugi letum novae letumque socero et regiae stirpi date.

Mihi peius aliquid, quod precer sponso, manet—
vivat. per urbes erret ignotas egens
MEDEA

MEDEA

Ye gods of wedlock, and thou, Lucina, guardian of the nuptial couch, and thou who didst teach Tiphys to guide his new barque to the conquest of the seas, and thou, grim ruler of the deeps of Ocean, and Titan, who dost portion out bright day unto the world, and thou who dost show thy bright face as witness of the silent mysteries, O three-formed Hecate, and ye gods by whose divinity Jason swore to me, to whom Medea may more lawfully appeal—thou chaos of endless night, ye realms remote from heaven, ye unhallowed ghosts, thou lord of the realm of gloom, and thou, his queen, won by violence but with better faith, with ill-omened speech I make my prayer to you. Be present, be present, ye goddesses who avenge crime, your hair foul with writhing snakes, grasping the smoking torch with your bloody hands, be present now, such as once ye stood in dread array beside my marriage couch; upon this new wife destruction bring, destruction on this father-in-law and the whole royal stock.

19 I have yet curse more dire to call down on my husband—may he live. Through unknown cities

1 Minerva.
2 Pluto.
3 Proserpina.
4 i.e. than that which Medea had experienced.
5 The Furies.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

exul pavens invisus incerti laris,
iam notus hospes limen alienum expetat,
me coniugem optet quoque non aliud queam
peius precari, liberis similes patri similesque matri.—parta iam, parta ultio est:
peperi, querelas verbaque in cassum sero?
non ibo in hostes? manibus executiam faces
caeloque lucem. spectat hoc nostri sator
Sol generis, et spectatur, et curru insidens per solita puri spatia decurrit poli?
non redit in ortus et remetitur diem?
da, da per auras curribus patriis vehi,
committe habenas, genitor, et flagrantibus
ignifera loris tribue moderari iuga;
gemino Corinthos litore opponens moras
cremata flammis maria committat duo.

Hoc restat unum, pronubam thalamo feram ut ipsa pinum postque sacrifcas preces
daem dicatis victimas altaribus.
per viscera ipsa quaere supplicio viam,
si vivis, anime, si quid antiqui tibi remanet vigoris; pelle femineos metus et inhospitalem Caucasum mente indue.
quodcumque vidit Pontus aut Phasis nefas, videbit Isthmos. efferat ignota horrida, tremenda caelo pariter ac terris mala mens intus agitat—vulnera et caedem et vagum

230
MEDEA

may he wander, in want, in exile, in fear of life, hated and homeless; may he seek hospitality at strange doors, by now a familiar applicant; may he desire me for wife, and, than which I can pray nothing worse, may his children be like their sire and like their mother.—Already borne, borne is my vengeance! I have borne children! But why frame complaints and idle words? Shall I not go against my enemies? I’ll snatch the bridal-torches from their hands and the light from heaven. Does he behold this, the Sun, father of my race, and do men still behold him 1 as, sitting in his chariot, he courses over bright heaven’s accustomed spaces? Why does he not return to his rising and measure back the day? Grant, oh, grant that I ride through the air in my father’s car; give me the reins, O sire, give me the right to guide thy fire-bearing steeds with the flaming reins; then let Corinth, with her twin shores cause of delay 2 to ships, be consumed by flames and bring the two seas together.

37 This course alone remains, that I myself bear the wedding torch unto the chamber and, after sacrificial prayers, slay victims on the consecrated altars. Amid the very entrails seek thou a way for punishment, if thou livest, O soul, if there remains to thee aught of thy old-time strength. Away with womanish fears, clothe thy heart with unfeeling Caucasus. Whatever horror Pontus has beheld, or Phasis, Isthmus shall behold. Wild deeds, unheard-of, horrible, calamities at which heaven and earth alike shall tremble, my heart deep within is planning—wounds, slaughter, death, creeping from limb to limb. Ah, too trivial

1 He should be darkened at sight of such wickedness.
2 i.e. by requiring ships to sail around the Peloponnesus.
funus per artus. levia memoravi nimis;
haec virgo feci. gravior exurgat dolor;
maiora iam me scelera post partus decent.

accingere ira teque in exitium para furore toto. paria narrentur tua
repudia thalamis. quo virum linques modo?
hoc quo secuta es. rumpe iam segnes moras;
quae scelere parta est, scelere linquenda est domus

CHORVS

Ad regum thalamos numine prospero qui caelum superi quique regunt fretum adsint cum populis rite faventibus.
primum sceptriferis colla Tonantibus
taurus celsa ferat tergore candido; Lucinam nivei femina corporis
intemptata iugo placet, et asperi Martis sanguineas quae cohibet manus, quae dat belligeris foedera gentibus
et cornu retinet divite copiam, donetur tenera mitior hostia.
et tu, qui facibus legitimis ades,
noctem discutiens auspice dextera
huc incede gradu marcidus ebrio, praecingens roseo tempora vinculo.
et tu quae, gemini praevia temporis,
tarde, stella, redis semper amantibus,
te matres, avide te cupiunt nurus
quamprimum radios spargere lucidos.
MEDEA

the deeds I have rehearsed; these things I did in girlhood. Let my grief rise to more deadly strength; greater crimes become me, now that I am a mother. Gird thyself with wrath, and prepare thee for deadly deeds with the full force of madness. Let the story of thy rejection match the story of thy marriage. How wilt thou leave thy husband? Even as thou didst follow him. Break off now dull delay; the home which by crime was gained, by crime must be abandoned.

CHORUS

[Chanting the epithalamium for Jason and Creusa.]

May the high gods who rule over heaven, and they who rule the sea, with gracious divinity attend on our princes' marriage, amid the people's solemn applause. First to the sceptre-bearing Thunderers let the bull with white-shining hide offer his high-raised neck. Lucina let a heifer appease, snow-white, untouched by the yoke; and let her who restrains the bloody hands of rough Mars, who brings peace to warring nations and holds plenty in her rich horn, mild goddess, be given a tender victim. And do thou, who the torches of lawful marriage attendest, dissipating the night with propitious hand, hither come, reeling with drunken footstep, binding thy temples with garlands of roses. And thou star, forerunner of twilight, who returnest ever slowly for lovers—thee, mothers, thee, brides eagerly await, to see thee full soon thy bright beams scattering.

1 In the crimes accompanying each.
2 The epithet here includes Juno as well as Jupiter.
3 Pax, goddess of concord.
4 Hymen.
5 Hesperus, the evening star.
Vincit virgineus decor
longe Cecropias nurus, et quas Taygeti iugis
exercet iuvenum modo
muris quod caret oppidum
et quas Aonius latex Alpheosque sacer lavat.

Si forma velit aspici, cedent Aesonio duci
proles fulminis improbi
aptat qui iuga tigribus,
nec non, qui tripodas movet,
frater virginis asperae,
cedet Castore cum suo Pollux caestibus aptior.

Sic, sic, caelicolae, precor,
vincat femina coniuges,
vir longe superet viros.

Haec cum femineo constitit in choro,
unius facies praenitet omnibus.
sic cum sole perit sidereus decor,
et densi latitant Pleiadum greges cum Phoebe solidum lumine non suo orbem circuitis cornibus alligat.

Talem dum iuvenis conspicit, en rubor perfudit subito purpureus genas.¹
ostro sic niveus puniceo color perfusus rubuit, sic nitidum iubar pastor luce nova roscidus aspicit.

¹ Leo finds a lacuna here and suggests the insertion of Talem... genas.
Our maiden in beauty far excels the Cecropian 1 brides, and those who on Taygetus’ ridges are trained after the manner of men by the unwalled city, 2 and those who bathe in Aonia’s 3 waters and Alpheus’ 4 sacred stream.

Should he wish to be judged in beauty, all will yield to the son of Aeson, our leader—the ruthless lightning’s son 5 who yokes the wild tigers, and he 6 who makes tremble the tripod, the stern virgin’s 7 brother; with his twin, Castor, Pollux will yield, more skilful in boxing.

So, so, ye heaven-dwellers, I pray you, let this bride surpass brides, this husband far excel husbands.

When she has taken her stand midst her train of maidens, her one beauty shines more brightly than all. So does starlight splendour wane with the coming of the sun, and the huddled flock of the Pleiades vanish away when Phoebe, shining with borrowed light, with encircling horns encloses her full-orbed disk. 8

While on such beauty the young lover gazes, see, her cheeks are suddenly covered with rosy blushes. 9 So snowy wool, dipped in purple dye, doth redden; so shines the sun when the shepherd at dawn, wet with the dew, beholds it.

1 Athenian. 2 Sparta. 3 Boeotian. 4 Of Elis. 5 See Index s.v. “Bacchus” and “Semele.” 6 Apollo. 7 Diana. 8 cf. Sappho, 3:

\[
\text{άστερες μὲν ἀμφὶ κάλαν σελάνναν}
\]\[
\text{ἄψ ἄπυκρυπτωσι φάεννον εἶδος}
\]\[
\text{δὲ ποτα πλήθωσα μᾶλιστα λάμπη}
\]\[
\text{γὰν ἐπὶ παῖσαν.}
\]

9 Translating Leo’s suggested supplementary lines.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Ereptus thalamis Phasidis horridi, effrenae solitus pectora coniugis invita trepidus prendere dextera, felix Aeoliam corripe virginem nunc primum soceris, sponse, volentibus.

Concesso, iuvenes, ludite iurgio,
hinc illinc, iuvenes, mittite carmina;
rara est in dominos iusta licentia.

Candida thyrsigeri proles generosa Lyaei, multifidam iam tempus erat succendere pinum;
excute sollemnem digitis marcentibus ignem.
festa dicax fundat convicia fescenninus,
solvat turba iocos—tacitis eat illa tenebris,
si qua peregrino nubit fugitiva marito.

MEDEA

Occidimus, aures pepulit hymenaeus meas.
vix ipsa tantum, vix adhuc credo malum.
hoc facere Jason potuit, erepto patre patria atque regno sedibus solam exteris deserere durus? merita contempsit mea 120
qui scelere flammata viderat vinci et mare?
adeone credit omne consumptum nefas?
incerta vaecors mente vaesana feror
partes in omnes; unde me ulcisci queam?
 utinam esset illi frater! est coniunx; in hanc
ferrum exigatur. hoc meis satis est malis?
si quod Pelasagae, si quod urbes barbarae
novere facinus quod tuae ignorant manus,
Do thou, O bridegroom, rescued from the marriage bonds of barbarous Phasis, wont with fear and reluctant hand to caress an unruly wife, joyfully take to thy arms the Aeolian maid—now at last 'tis with the parents' will.

Sport, youths, with free banter and jesting; let your songs ring out, O youths, in responsive cadence; rarely against our lords is unrebuked licence given.

Comely, noble scion of Lyaeus, the thyrsus-bearer, now is the time to light thy torch of frayed pinewood; toss on high the ritual fire with languishing fingers. Let saucy, sharp wit pour forth festive banterings and let the throng be free with jesting. Let her pass in silent gloom who steals away to wed with a foreign husband.

We are undone! Upon my ears has sounded the marriage-hymn. So great a calamity scarce I myself, scarce even yet can comprehend? Had Jason the heart to do this; having robbed me of my father, native land, and kingdom, could he leave me alone in a foreign land, cruel? Has he scorned my deservings, who saw flames and sea conquered by my crime? Does he think that all my powers of evil are so exhausted? Perplexed, witless, with mind scarce sane, I am tossed to every side. Whence can I get vengeance? I would that he had a brother! A wife he has; into her heart let the sword be driven. Is this enough to offset my woes? All monstrous deeds which Pelasgian, which barbaric cities know, all that thy own hands do not know,

1 Creusa, a descendant of Aeolus.
2 Hymen, son of Bacchus and Venus.
3 That he might be slain as her own had been.
nunc est parandum. scelera te hortentur tua et cuncta redeant—inclitum regni decus raptum et nefandae virginis parvus comes divisus ense, funus ingemum patri sparsumque ponto corpus, et Peliae senis decocta aeno membra. funestum impie quam saepe fudi sanguinem!—et nullum scelus irata feci; movit infelix amor.

Quid tamen Iason potuit, alieni arbitri iurisque factus? debuit ferro obvium offere pectus—melius, a melius, dolor
furiose, loquere. si potest, vivat meus, ut fuit, Iason; si minus, vivat tamen
memorique nostri muneri parcat meo.
culpa est Creontis tota, qui sceptro impotens
coniugia solvit quique genetricem abstrahit natis et arto pignore astrictam fidem dirimit; petatur, solus hic poenas luat
quas debet. alto cinere cumulabo domum;
videbit atrum verticem flammis agi
Malea longas navibus flectens moras.

NVTRIX

Sile, obsecro, questusque secreto abditos
'manda dolori. gravia quisquis vulnera patiente et aequo mutus animo pertulit, referre potuit; ira quae tegitur nocet;
professa perdunt odia vindictae locum.
MEDEA

must be made ready now. Let thine own crimes urge thee on, and let them all return in memory—the bright ornament of the kingdom stolen away, and the wicked girl's little comrade¹ hewn in pieces with the sword, his murder forced upon his father's sight, his body scattered over the deep, and the limbs of aged Pelias seethed in a brazen pot. Murder and impious bloodshed how often have I wrought!—and yet no crime have I done in wrath; 'twas ill-omened love that stirred me. ¹³⁷ But what else could Jason have done, once made subject to another's will and power? He should have bared his breast unto the sword—nay, ah, nay, mad grief, say not so! If possible, may he live, my Jason, as once he was; if not, still may he live and, mindful of me, keep unharmed the gift² I gave. The fault is Creon's, all, who with unbridled sway dissolves marriages, tears mothers from their children, and breaks pledges bound by straitest oath; on him be my attack, let him alone pay the penalties which he owes. I will pile his home high with ashes; its dark pinnacles wrapt in flames Malea shall see. where, jutting out, it holds ships in tedious delay.

NURSE

Be silent, I pray thee, and confide to secret grief thy hidden plaints. Whoe'er has dumbly borne hard blows with patient and calm soul, has been able to repay them; it is hidden wrath that harms; hatred proclaimed loses its chance for vengeance.

¹ Absyr tus: see Index. ² i.e. his life.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MEDEA
Levis est dolor qui capere consilium potest et clepere sese; magna non latitant mala.
libet ire contra.

NVTRIX
Siste furialem impetum, alumna; vix te tacita defendit quies.

MEDEA
Fortuna fortis metuit, ignavos premit.

NVTRIX
Tunc est probanda, si locum virtus habet. 160

MEDEA
Numquam potest non esse virtuti locus.

NVTRIX
Spes nulla rebus monstrat adflictis viam.

MEDEA
Qui nil potest sperare, desperet nihil.

NVTRIX
Abiere Colchi, coniugis nulla est fides nihilque superest opibus e tantis tibi.

MEDEA
Medea superest—hic mare et terras vides ferrumque et ignes et deos et fulmina.
240
MEDEA

Light is the grief which can take counsel and hide itself; great ills lie not in hiding. 'Tis pleasing to face the foe.

NURSE

Stay this frenzied outburst, my child; even silent calm can scarce defend thee.

MEDEA

Fortune fears the brave, the cowardly overwhelms.

NURSE

If there is place for courage, then should it be approved.

MEDEA

It can never be that for courage there is no place.

NURSE

No hope points out a way for our broken fortunes.

MEDEA

Whoso has naught to hope, let him despair of naught.

NURSE

The Colchians are no longer on thy side, thy husband's vows have failed, and there is nothing left of all thy wealth.

MEDEA

Medea is left—in her thou beholdest sea and land, and sword and fire and gods and thunderbolts.
SENCAE TRAGOEDIAE

NVT. Rex est timendus.
MED. Rex meus fuerat pater.
NVT. Non metuis arma?
MED. Sint licet terra edita.
NVT. Moriere.
MED. Cupio.
NVT. Profuge.
MED. Paenituit fugae. 170
NVT. Medea,
MED. Fiam.
NVT. Mater es.
MED. Cui sim vides.
NVT. Profugere dubitas?
MED. Fugiam, at uliscar prius.
NVT. Vindex sequetur.
MED. Forsan inveniam moras.

NVTRIX

Compesce verba, parce iam, demens, minis animosque minue; temporı aptari decet.

MEDEA

Fortuna opes auferre, non animum potest.—sed cuius ıctu regius cardo strepit?
ipse est Pelasgo tumidus imperio Creo.

CREO

Medea, Colchi noxium Aetae genus, noundum meis exportat e regnis pedem? 180

242
MEDEA

NUR. The king is to be feared.
MED. My father was a king.
NUR. Fearst thou not arms?
MED. Not though they were sprung from earth.¹
NUR. Thou’lt die.
MED. I wish it.
NUR. Flee!
MED. Of flight I have repented.
NUR. Medea, Will I be.
MED. Thou art a mother.
NUR. By whom, thou seest.
NUR. Dost delay flight?
MED. Flee I shall, but I’ll take vengeance first.
NUR. The avenger will pursue.
MED. Perchance I shall find means to stay him.

NURSE

Check thy words, spare now thy threats, foolish one, and thy proud spirit humble; ’tis well to fit thee to the times.

MEDEA

Fortune can take away my wealth, but not my spirit.—But under whose blows does the king’s door upon its hinges creak? It is Creon himself, puffed with Pelasgian power.

[MEDEA has retired to the back of the stage. Exit NURSE. Enter CREON.]

CREON

Medea, Colchian Aeëtes’ baleful child, has she not yet taken herself from my realm? She is ¹ As when armed warriors sprang from the dragon’s teeth sowed in the earth by Jason.

molitur aliquid; nota fraus, nota est manus.
cui parcat illa quemve secundum sitet?
abolere propere pessinam ferro luem
equidem parabam; precibus evicet gener.
concessa vita est, liberet fines metu
abeatque tuta.
   Fert gradum contra ferox
minaxque nostros propius affatus petit.
arcete, famuli, tactu et accessu procul,
iubete sileat. regium imperium pati aliquando discat. vade veloci fuga monstrumque saevum horribile iamdudum avehe.

MEDEA
Quod crimen aut quae culpa multatur fuga?

CREO
Quae causa pellat, innocens mulier rogat.

MEDEA
Si iudicas, cognosce; si regnas, iube.

CREO
Aequum atque iniquum regis imperium feras.1

MEDEA
Iniqua numquam regna perpetuo manent.

CREO
I, querere Colchis.

1 Leo alone of editors gives si regnas, iube to Creon, and deletes l. 195. This omission, especially, is unfortunate, as it leaves no background for iniqua in l. 196.
plotting mischief; I know her guile, I know her power. Whom will she spare? Whom will she let live in peace? I was making ready to rid me of this outrageous pest by the sword's means and with all speed; but the prayers of my daughter's husband have prevailed. I have granted her life; let her free my boundaries from fear, and depart in safety.

[He sees Medea approaching.]

Boldly she moves to meet me, and with threatening mien seeks closer speech. Keep her off, ye slaves, from touch and approach far off; bid her keep silence; let her learn at last to obey a king's commands. [To Medea.] Hence in swift flight! remove at once thine abominable presence, dire, horrible!

What crime, what fault is punished by my exile?

What cause expels her—that may an innocent woman ask.

If thou'rt my judge, then hear me; if my king, command.

A king's commands, just and unjust, thou must obey.

Unjust rule never abides continually.

Go, complain to the Colchians.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MEDEA

Redeo; qui avexit, ferat.

CREO

Vox constituto sera decreto venit.

MEDEA

Qui statuit aliquid parte inaudita altera, aequum licet statuerit, haud aequus fuit.

CREO

Auditus a te Pelia supplicium tulit? sed fare, causae detur egregiae locus.

MEDEA

Difficile quam sit animum ab ira flectere iam concitatum, quamque regale hoc putet, sceptris superbas quisquis admovit manus, qua coepit, ire, regia didici mea. quamvis enim sim clade miseranda obruta, expulsa supplex sola deserta, undique afflicta, quondam nobili fulsi patre avoque clarum Sole deduxi genus. quodcumque placidis flexibus Phasis rigat Pontusque quidquid Scythicus a tergo videt, palustribus qua Maria dulcescunt aquis, armata peltis quidquid exterret cohors inclusa ripis vidua Thermodontiis,—
MEDEA

MEDEA

I go; but let him take me who brought me thence.

CREON

Thy prayer comes too late; my resolve is fixed.

MEDEA

He who has judged aught, with the other side unheard, may have judged righteously, but was himself unrighteous.

CREON

Didst thou hear Pelias ere he suffered punishment? But say on; be a hearing granted to thine excellent case.

MEDEA

How hard it is to turn away from wrath the spirit when once aroused, and how royal it seems to him who has grasped the sceptre in his proud hands to go on as he has begun, I have learned in my own royal home. For, although I am overwhelmed by piteous disaster, an exile, suppliant, lonely, forsaken, on all sides buffeted, once I had glory from my noble father, and from my grandsire, the Sun, traced illustrious descent. All the land that Phasis waters with its calm, winding stream, all that Scythian Pontus sees behind it, where the sea grows sweet with marshy waters,¹ all that the unwedded hordes,² crescent-shielded, hemmed by Thermodon’s banks,

¹ Numerous rivers flow into the eastern part of the Pontus, depositing much mud. Hence the marshy nature of the shore. These waters also sweeten the naturally saline water of the Pontus.
² The Amazons,
SENITAE TRAGOEDIEAE

hoc omne noster genitor imperio regit.
generosa, felix, decore regali potens
fulsi; petebant tunc meos thalamos proci, qui nunc petuntur.  rapida fortuna ac levis praecepsque regno eripuit, exilio dedit.

Confide regnis, cum levis magnâs opes
huc ferat et illuc casus!  hoc reges habent magnificum et ingens, nulla quod rapiat dies:
prodesse miseris, supplices fido lare
protegere.  solum hoc Colchico regno extuli, decus illud ingens Graeciae et flore inclitum,
praesidia Achivae gentis et prolem deum
servasse memet.  munus est Orpheus meum, qui saxa cantu mulcet et silvas trahit,
geminique munus Castor et Pollux meum est
satique Borea quique trans Pontum quoque summota Lynceus lumine immisso videt, omnesque Minyae; nam ducem taceo ducum,
pro quo nihil debetur; hunc nulli imputo;
vobis revexi ceteros, unum mihi.

Incesse nunc et cuncta flagitia ingere.
fatebor: obici crimen hoc solum potest, Argo reversa.  virgini placeat pudor
paterque placeat; tota cum ducibus ruet
Pelasga tellus, hic tuus primum gener 230
tauri feroxis ore flammanti occidet.
fortuna causam quae volet nostram premat, 240

248
fill with alarm—over all this my father rules. High-born, blest of heaven, in royal power and splendour then I shone; then princes sued for marriage with me, whom now I must sue. Swift and fickle is fortune and, swooping down, has torn me from royalty and given me o'er to exile.

221 Put thy trust in royalty, although light chance hither and thither tosses e'en mighty wealth! This is the glorious, great privilege of kings, which time can never snatch away—to succour the afflicted, on a safe hearth to shelter suppliants. This only have I brought from my Colchian realm, that by my own self I saved that great glory and illustrious flower of Greece, bulwark of the Achaians, offspring of gods.\(^1\) Orpheus is my gift, who softens the rocks by his singing and draws trees after him; mine, too, are the twins, Castor and Pollux, and the sons of Boreas,\(^2\) and Lynceus, who with far-flung gaze sees things removed even beyond Pontus,—and all the Minyans. For of the leader\(^3\) of the leaders I say no word; for him naught is owing; I count none debtor for his sake. For you I brought back the rest; him only for myself.

236 Come on now, and heap all kinds of shameful deeds upon me. I will confess them; but as for crimes, this only can be charged, the rescue of the Argo. Suppose modesty should please the maiden, suppose her filial duty should please her; then will the whole Pelasgian land perish with its leaders, and this thy son-in-law will first fall before the fiery breath of the fierce bull.\(^4\) Let what fortune will, oppress me;

---

1 The Argonauts.  2 Zetes and Calaïs.  3 Jason.  4 In vivid memory she puts herself back at the parting of the ways, where she was debating in her heart as to her course, and from this standpoint she speaks.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

non paenitet servasse tot regum deus.
quodcumque culpa praemium ex omni tuli,
hoc est penes te. si placet, damna ream;
seu redde crimen. sum nocens, fateor, Creo;
talem sciebas esse, cum genua attigi
fidemque supplex praesidis dextrae peti;
iterum miseriis angulum ac sedem rogo
latebrasque viles. urbe si pelli placet, detur remotus aliquis in regnis locus.

CREO

Non esse me qui sceptrum violentum geram nec qui superbo miserias calcem pede, testatus equidem videor haud clare parum generum exulem legendo et afflictum et gravi terrore pavidum, quippe quem poenae expetit letoque Acastus regna Thessalica optimens.

senio trementem debili atque aevo gravem patrem peremptum queritur et caesi senis discissa membra, cum dolo captae tuo piae sorores impium auderent nefas.
potest Iason, si tuam causam amoves,
suam tueri; nullus innocuum cruor contaminavit, asuit ferro manus
proeulque vestro purus a coetu stetit.
tu, tu malorum machinatrix facinorum,
feminea cui nequitia ad audenda omnia, (robur virile est, nulla famae memoria, egredere, purga regna, letales simul
tecum affer herbas, libera cives metu, alia sedens tellure sollicita deos.

250
I repent not the glorious salvation of so many kings. Whatever reward I have won by all my crimes, it is in thy hands. Arraign and condemn me, if 'tis thy pleasure; but give me back my sin.\(^1\) I am guilty, I confess it, Creon; such didst thou know me when I clasped thy knees and as suppliant sought the loyalty of thy protecting hand. Once more, some corner, some abiding-place for my woes I beg, some paltry hiding-place; if from thy city thou art pleased to drive me, let some remote nook in thy realm be given me.

CREON

That I am not one to wield the sceptre with violence nor to trample upon misery with haughty foot, methinks I have not unclearly shown by choosing for son-in-law an exile, crushed and stricken with heavy fear—aye, one whom Acastus, lord of Thessaly, demands for punishment and death. He complains that his father,\(^2\) palsied and weak with age, burdened with years, was taken off, and the murdered old man's limbs torn asunder, when, deceived by thy guile, his\(^3\) pious sisters dared an impious crime. Jason can defend his own cause if it is separate from thine; no blood has stained his innocence, his hand wielded no sword, and he has kept far off and free from company of such as thou. Thou, thou contriver of wickedness, who combinest woman's wanton recklessness and man's strength, with no thought of reputation, away! Purge my kingdom and take thy deadly herbs with thee; free the citizens from fear; abiding in some other land, harry\(^4\) the gods.

\(^1\) i.e. Jason, for whom she sinned.
\(^2\) Pelias.
\(^3\) i.e. Acastus'.
\(^4\) i.e. by the power of her witchcraft.
MEDEA

Profugere cegis? redde fugienti ratem
vel redde comitem. fugere cur solam iubes?
non sola veni. bella si metuis pati,
utrumque regno pelle. cur santes duos
distinguis? illi Pelia, non nobis iacet;
fugam, rapinas adice, desertum patrem lacerumque fratrem, quidquid etiam nune novas docet maritus coniuges, non est meum.
totiens nocens sum facta, sed numquam mihi.

CREO

Iam exisse decuit. quid seris fando moras?

MEDEA

Supplex recedens illud extremum precor:
ne culpa natos matris insontes trahat.

CREO

Vade; hos paterno ut genitor excipiam sinu.

MEDEA

Per ego auspicatos regii thalami toros,
per spes futuras perque regnorum status, Fortuna varia dubia quos agitat vice,
precor, brevem largire fugienti moram,
dum extrema natis mater infigo oscula
fortasse moriens.

252
MEDEA

Dost force me to flee? Give back then to the fugitive her ship, yea, give back her comrade. Why dost thou bid me flee alone? I did not come alone. If 'tis war thou fearest, drive us both from thy kingdom. Why make distinction 'twixt two culprits? 'Tis for him Pelias lies dead, and not for me. Add flight, theft, a deserted father, a mangled brother, any crime which e'en now the bridegroom is teaching his new wives—'tis no crime of mine. Full oft have I been made guilty, but never for myself.

CREON

Thy going is already overdue. Why dost contrive delay with words?

MEDEA

Suppliant I make this last prayer to thee as I depart: let not the mother's guilt drag down her guiltless sons.

CREON

Go then; these will I take as father to my fatherly embrace.

MEDEA

By the blest bed of this royal marriage, by thy hopes for the future, and by the estate of thrones, which fickle Fortune disturbs with changeful lot, I pray thee be bountiful of a brief stay of my flight, while I, their mother, imprint on my sons the latest kiss, perchance my dying act.

1 Jason.
2 i.e. with Acastus.
3 She uses the plural with a sneer.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

CREO
Fraudibus tempus petis.

290

MEDEA
Quae fraudus timeri tempore exiguus potest?

CREO
Nullum ad nocendum tempus angustum est malis.

MEDEA
Parumne miserae temporis lacrimis negas?

CREO
Etsi repugnatus precibus infixus timor,
unus parando dabitur exilio dies.

MEDEA
Nimis est, recidas aliquid ex isto licet.
et ipsa propero.

CREO
Capite supplicium lues, clarum priusquam Phoebus attollat diem nisi cedis Isthmo.

Sacra me thalami vocant,
vocat precari festus Hymenaeo dies.

300

CHORVS
Audax nimium qui freta primus rate tam fragili perfida rupit terrasque suas post terga videns animam levibus credidit auris, dubioque secans aequora cursu
MEDEA

CREON
For treachery thou, art seeking time.

MEDEA
What treachery can be feared in time so scant?

CREON
No time is too brief for harm to those on evil bent.

MEDEA
Dost refuse a poor mother just a little time for tears?

CREON
Though my ingrained fear bids me refuse thy plea, one day shall be given to prepare for banishment.

MEDEA
'Tis more than enough, though thou retrench it somewhat. I also am in haste.

CREON
With thy life shalt thou pay penalty if before Phoebus brings the bright day thou art not gone from Isthmus.

CHORUS
Too venturesome the man who in frail barque first cleft the treacherous seas and, with one last look behind him at the well-known shore, trusted his life to the fickle winds; who, ploughing the waters on an
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

potuit tenui fidere ligno inter vitae mortisque vias nimium gracili limite ducto.

Candida nostri saecula patres
videre, procul fraude remotas.
sua quisque piger litora tangens
patrioque senex factus in arvo, parvo dives, nisi quas tulerat
natale solum, non norat opes.

suo quisquam sidera norat,
stellisque quibus pingitur aether
non erat usus, nondum pluvias Hyadas poterat vitare ratis,
non Oleniae lumina caprae,
nec quae sequitur flectitque senex Attica tardus plaustra Bootes, nondum Boreas, nondum Zephyrus
nomen habebant.

Ausus Tiphys pandere vasto
carbasa ponto legesque novas scribere ventis: nunc lina sinu tendere toto, nunc prolato
pede transversos captare notos, nunc antennas medio tutas
ponere malo, nunc in summo religare loco, cum iam totos avidus nimium navitas flatus optat et alto rubicunda tremunt sipara velo.
bene dissaepti foedera mundi
traxit in unum Thessala pinus

1 Leo deletes these two lines.
2 Leo and Richter agree in the rearrangement of the following lines; M. Müller, of the modern editors, defends the traditional order.
unknown course, could trust to a slender plank, stretching too slight a boundary between the ways of life and death.

329 Unsullied the ages our fathers saw, with crime banished afar. Then every man inactive kept to his own shores and lived to old age on ancestral fields, rich with but little, knowing no wealth save what his home soil had yielded. Not yet could any read the sky and use the stars with which the heavens are spangled; not yet could ships avoid the rainy Hyades; not yet did the fires of the Olenian Goat nor the Attic Wain which slow old Boötes follows and controls, not yet did Boreas, not yet Zephyrus have names.

318 Tiphys made bold to spread his canvas on the vasty deep and to write new laws for the winds: now to spread full-bellied sail, now to haul the forward sheet\(^1\) and catch cross-breezes, now to set the yards in safety midway of the mast, now to bind them at the top, when the too eager sailor prays for winds and aloft the ruddy topsails flutter. The lands, well separated before by nature's laws, the Thessalian ship\(^2\) made one, bade the deep suffer

\(^{1}\) i.e. to set the sail sideways.

\(^{2}\) The Argo.
iuscitque pati verbera pontum, partemque metus fieri nostri mare sepositum.
Dedit illa graves improba poenas per tam longos ducta timores, cum duo montes, claustra profundi, hinc atque illinc subito impulsu velut aetherio gemenent sonitu, spargeret arces nubesque ipsas mare deprensum.
palluit audax Tiphys et omnes labente manu misit habenas, Orpheus tacuit torpente lyra ipsaque vocem perdidit Argo.
quid cum Siculi virgo Pelori, rabidos utero succincta canes, omnes pariter solvit hiatus? quis non totos horruit artus totiens uno latrante malo?
Nunc iam cessit pontus et omnes patitur leges; non Palladia compacta manu regumque ferens inclita remos quae erit Argo; quaelibet altum cumba pererrat. terminus omnis motus et urbes muros terra posuere nova, blows, and the sequestered sea become a part of our human fear.

Heavy the penalties which that bold barque paid, brought through long terrors, when two mountains, barriers of the deep, from either side quick rushing, roared as with sound of thunder, and the sea, caught between, sprinkled their peaks and the clouds themselves. Bold Tiphys paled with fear and let the helm slip wholly from his faltering hand; Orpheus was still, his lyre mute with amaze, and the Argo herself lost voice. What, when the maid of Sicilian Pelorus, her waist begirt with ravenous dogs, opened all her gaping throats together? Who did not shudder in every limb when that one monster howled with so many tongues? What, when the deadly pests soothed the Ausonian sea with their tuneful songs, when, sounding back on his Pierian lyre, Thracian Orpheus well-nigh forced the Siren to follow, though wont to hold ships spell-bound by her song? Of this voyage what was the prize? The golden fleece and Medea, worse evil than the sea, worthy to be the first ship's merchandise.

Now, in our time, the deep has ceased resistance and submits utterly to law; no famous Argo, framed by a Pallas' hand, with princes to man its oars, is sought for; any little craft now wanders at will upon the deep. All bounds have been removed, cities have set their walls in new lands, and the world, now

1 i.e. of oars.
2 The Argo's figurehead was made of wood from the talking oaks of Dodona and had itself power to speak and give timely warnings.
3 Scylla.
4 The Sirens.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

nil qua fuerat sede reliquit
pervius orbis:
Indus gelidum potat Araxen, Albin Persae Rhenumque bibunt.
venient annis saecula seris,
quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
laxet et ingens pateat tellus Tethysque novos detegat orbes nec sit terris ultima Thule.

NVTRIX

Alumna, celerem quo rapis tectis pedem?
resiste et iras comprime ae retine impetum.

Incerta qualis entheos gressus tulit cum iam recepto maenas insanit deo Pindi nivalis vertice aut Nysae iugis, talis recursat huc et huc motu effero,
furoris ore signa lymphati gerens.
flammata facies spiritum ex alto citat,
proclamat, oculos uberi fletu rigat,
renidet; omnis specimen affectus capit.

quo pondus animi vergat, ubi ponat minas,
haeret; minatur aestuat queritur gemit.

ubi se iste fluctus franget? exundat furor.
non facile secum versat aut medium scelus;
se vincet. irae novimus veteris notas.

magnum aliquid instat, efferum inmame impium.
vultum furoris cerno. di fallant metum!
passable throughout, has left nothing where it once had place: the Indian drinks of the cold Araxes, the Persians quaff the Elbe and the Rhine. There will come an age in the far-off years when Ocean shall unloose the bonds of things, when the whole broad earth shall be revealed, when Tethys shall disclose new worlds and Thule not be the limit of the lands.

NURSE

[Sees MEDEA hurrying out of the house.]

Dear child, whither hurriest thou abroad? Stay, curb thy passion, check thy impetuous haste.

[MEDEA goes on without heeding.]

382 As a maenad uncertainly directs her frenzied steps when now she raves at the oncoming of the god, on snowy Pindus' top or on Nysa's ridges, so she runs now here, now there, with frantic rush, marks of distracted passion in her face. Her cheeks aflame, she pants with deep sobs for breath, shouts aloud, weeps floods of tears, beams with joy; she assumes the proof of every passion. Whither the weight of her wrath inclines, where it aims its threats, hangs still in doubt; she threatens, seethes with rage, complains, groans aloud. Where will this wave break itself? Madness o'erflows its bounds. No simple or half-way crime doth she ponder in her heart; she will outdo herself. I recognize the marks of her old-time rage. Something great is impending, wild, monstrous, impious.

[MEDEA now approaches.]

I see madness in her face. May Heaven avert my fears!
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MEDEA

Si quaeris odio, misera, quem statuas modum, imitare amorem. regias egone ut faces inulta patiari? segnis hic ibit dies, tanto petitus ambitu, tanto datus?

dum terra caelum media libratum feret nitidusque certas mundus evolvet vices numerusque harenis derit et solem dies, noctem sequentur astra, dum siecas polus versabit Arctos, flumina in pontum cadent, numquam meus cessabit in poenas furor cresceetque semper. quae ferarum immanitas, quae Scylla, quae Charybdis Ausonium mare Siculumque sobens quaeve anhelantem premens Titana tantis Aetna fervebit minis?

non rapidus amnis, non procellosum mare Pontusve Coro saevus aut vis ignium adiuta flatu possit imitari impetum irasque nostras; sternam et evertam omnia.

Timuit Creontem ac bella Thessalici ducis? amor timere neminem verus potest. sed cesserit coactus et dederit manus; adire certe et coniugem extremo alloqui sermone potuit. hoc quoque extimuit ferox. laxare certe tempus inmitis fugae genero licebat—liberis unus dies datus est duobus. non queror tempus breve; multum patebit. faciet hic faciet dies quod nullus unquam taceat. invadam deos et cuncta quatiam.

262
MEDEA

MEDEA [aside]

If thou seekst, poor soul, what limit thou shouldst set to hate, copy thy love. Can it be that unavenged I should endure this royal wedding? Shall this day go idly by so anxiously besought, so anxiously bestowed? While the central earth shall bear up the balanced heavens, while the bright universe shall pursue its unchanging rounds, while sands lack number, while day attends the sun and stars the night, while the dry Bears revolve about the pole, and rivers fall to the sea, my madness shall never cease its quest of vengeance and shall grow on for ever. What ferocity of beasts, what Scylla, what Charybdis, sucking up the Ausonian and Sicilian waters, or what Aetna, resting heavily on panting Titan, shall burn with such threats as I? No whirling river, no storm-tossed sea, no Pontus, raging beneath the north-west wind, no violence of fire, fanned by the gale, could imitate the onrush of my wrath. I shall lay prostrate and destroy all things.

Did he fear Creon and the threats of Thessaly’s king? True love can fear no man. But grant that under compulsion he yielded and made surrender; he could at least have come to me, could have spoken some last words to his wife. This also, though bold of heart, he feared to do. Surely ’twas in the power of the king’s son-in-law to put off the time of my cruel banishment—one day was given for my children twain. But I complain not that the time is short; it shall stretch far. This day shall do, shall do that whereof no day shall e’er be dumb. I will storm the gods, and shake the universe.

1 Because these constellations never set beneath the ocean.
2 Jason.
3 Acastus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

NVTRIX
Recipe turbatum malis.
era, pectus, animum mitiga.

MEDEA
Sola est quies,
mecum ruina cuncta si video obruta;
mecum omnia abeant. trahere, cum pereas, libet.

NVTRIX
Quam multa sint timenda, si perstas, vide;
nemo potentes aggridi tutus potest. 430

IASON
O dura fata semper et sortem asperam,
cum saevit et cum parcit ex aequo malam!
remedia quotiens invenit nobis deus periculis peiora; si vellem fide praestare meritis coniugis, leto fuit caput offerendum; si mori nollem, fide misero carendum. non timor vicit fide, med trepida pietas; quippe sequeretur necem
proles parentum. sancta si caelum incolis Iustitia, numen invoco ac testor tuum:
nati patrem vicere. quin ipsam quoque,
etsi ferox est corde nec patiens iugi,
consulere natis malle quam thalamis reor.
constituit animus precibus iratam aggridi.
atque ecce, viso memet exiluit, furit,
fert odia prae se; totus in vultu est dolor.
264
MEDEA

NURSE

Win back thy woe-troubled heart, my mistress; calm thy soul.

MEDEA

The only calm for me—if with me I see the universe o’erwhelmed in ruins; with me let all things pass away. ’Tis sweet to drag others down when thou art perishing.

[Exit.

NURSE [calling after MEDEA]

Beware how many perils are to be feared if thou persist; no one may safely assail the strong.

[Enter JASON.]

JASON

O fate, ever hard, and fortune, cruel—when she rages and when she spares, equally malignant! How often does God find cures for us worse than our perils; should I resolve to be faithful to my wife according to her deserts, my life would be forfeited to death; should I refuse to die, alas! I must be faithless. It is not fear, but fearful father-love that has conquered faith; surely my children would share their parents’ death. O holy Justice, if in heaven thou dwellest, I call thy divinity to witness: the sons have prevailed upon the sire. Nay, even she herself, though she is fierce of heart and ill brooks the yoke, would rather, methinks, take thought for her sons than for her marriage rights. My mind is fixed to assail her wrath with prayers. [Enter MEDEA.] And see, at sight of me she starts up, bursts into a passion, displays her hate; all her anguish is in her face.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MEDEA

Fugimus, Iason, fugimus. hoc non est novum, mutare sedes; causa fugiendi nova est—pro te solebam fugere. discedo exeo, penatibus profugere quam cogis tuis; at quo remittis? Phasin et Colchos petam patriumque regnum quaeque fraternus cruor perfudit arva? quas peti terras iubes? quae maria monstras? Pontici fauces freti per quas revexi nobilem regum manum adulterum secula per Symplegadas? parvam Iolcon, Thessala an Tempe petam? quascumque aperui tibi vias, clausi mihi. quo me remittis? exuli exilium imperas nec das. eatur. regius iussit gener; nihil recuso. dira supplicia ingere; merui. cruentis paelicem poenis prenat regalis ira, vinculis oneret manus clausamque saxo noctis aeternae obruit; minora meritis patiar.

Ingratum caput, revolvat animus igneos tauri halitus interque saevos gentis indomitae metus armifero in arvo flammeum Aeetae pecus, hostisque subiti tela, cum iussu meo terrigena miles mutua caede occidit. adice expetita spolia Phrixei arietis somnoque iussum lumina ignoto dare insomne monstrum, traditum fratrem nece

1 Leo deletes ii. 467, 468.
We are fleeing, Jason, fleeing. 'Tis no new thing to change our abode; but the cause of flight is new—'twas for thee I was wont to flee. I withdraw, I go away, whom thou art forcing to flee forth from thy home; but whither dost thou send me back? Shall I seek Phasis and the Colchians, my father's kingdom, the fields drenched with my brother's blood? What lands dost thou bid me seek? What waters dost show to me? The jaws of the Pontic sea through which I brought back the noble band of princes, following thee, thou wanton, through the Clashing Rocks? Is it little Iolcos or Thessalian Tempe I shall seek? All the ways which I have opened for thee I have closed upon myself. Whither dost send me back? Thou imposest exile on an exile, but givest no place. But let me go. A king's son-in-law has commanded it; I'll not refuse. Heap dire penalties upon me; them have I deserved. Let the angry king crush thy mistress with cruel punishments, load her hands with chains, shut her up and bury her in dungeons of eternal darkness; I shall suffer less than I deserve.

465 O ungrateful man, let thy heart recall the bull's fiery breath, and, midst the savage terrors of an unconquered race, the fire-breathing herd on Aeëtes' arm-bearing plain, the weapons of the suddenly appearing foe, when, at my order, the earth-born soldiery fell in mutual slaughter. Think, too, on the long-sought spoil of the ram of Phrixus, the sleepless dragon, bidden to close his eyes in unknown slumber, my brother given up to death,

1 Where the dragon's teeth sowed by Jason sprang up into full-armed warriors.
et scelere in uno non semel factum scelus, ausasque natas fraude deceptas mea secare membra non revicturi senis. 476 per spes tuorum liberum et certum larem, 478 per victa monstra, per manus, pro te quibus numquam peperci, perque praeteritos metus, 480 per caelum et undas,coniugi testes mei, miserere, redde supplici felix vicem. 482 aliena quae rens regna deserui mea; 477
ex opibus illis, quas procul raptas Scythae usque a perustis Indiae populis agunt, quas quia referta vix domus gaza capit, ornatus auro nemora, nil exul tuli nisi fratris artus. hos quoque impendi tibi, tibi patria cessit, tibi pater, frater, pudor—hac dote nupsi. redde fugienti sua.

IASON

Perimere cum te vellet infestus Creo, lacrimis meis evictus exilium dedit. 490

MEDEA

Poemam putabam; munus ut video est fuga.

IASON

Dum licet abire, profuge teque hinc eripe; gravis ira regum est semper.

1 Medea not only slew her brother, but cut him in pieces and cast them into the sea. She thinks of each piece as a separate crime. Similarly, when her brother’s ghost appears to her (l. 963) it is still in pieces, dispersis membris.
crime not done once alone in one act of crime;\(^1\) think on the daughters\(^2\) who, lured by my guile, dared dismember the old man who was never to return to life. By the hopes of thy children, thine established house, by the monsters conquered, by these hands which I have never spared in thy service, by the perils we have undergone, by heaven and sea, witnesses of my marriage, have mercy on me; happy thyself, give thy suppliant her turn at happiness. Seeking a kingdom for another, I have given up my own; of all that wealth which, plundered even from the distant swart tribes of India, the Scythians heap up, that golden treasure which, since the packed palace can scarce contain it, we hang upon the trees;\(^3\) I brought away nothing in my exile save only my brother's limbs. Those also I squandered upon thee; for thee my country has given place, for thee father, brother, maidenhood—with this dower did I wed thee. Give back to the fugitive her own.

JASON

When angry Creon was bent on thy destruction, 'twas by my tears he was prevailed upon to grant thee banishment.

MEDEA

A punishment I deemed it; now, as I see, exile is a boon.

JASON

Depart while still thou mayst; take thyself hence; grievous ever is the wrath of kings.

\(^2\) Of Pelias.

\(^3\) Referring to the golden fleece.
Hoc suades mihi, praestas Creusae; paelicem invisam amoves.

Medea amores obicit?

Et caedem et dolos.

Obicere tandem quod potes crimen mihi?

Quodcumque feci.

Restat hoc unum insuper, tuis ut etiam sceleribus fiam nocens.

Tua illa, tua sunt illa; cui prodest scelus is fecit. omnes coniugem infamem arguant; solus tuere, solus insontem voca; tibi innocens sit quisquis est pro te nocens.

Ingrata vita est cuius acceptae pudet.

Retinenda non est cuius acceptae pudet.
MEDEA

MEDEA

In urging this upon me, thou art Creusa's advocate; thou wouldst remove the rival whom she hates.

JASON

What! Medea charge me with love?

MEDEA

Yes, murder, too, and treachery.

JASON

What crime, pray, canst thou charge to me?

MEDEA

Whatever I have done.

JASON

This one thing remains still for me, to become guilty of thy sins as well.

MEDEA

They are, they are thine own; who profits by a sin has done the sin. Though all should hold thy wife infamous, do thou alone protect her, do thou alone call her innocent; let her be guiltless in thy sight, who for thy sake is guilty.

JASON

Unwelcome is life which one is ashamed to have accepted.

MEDEA

Then one should not keep a life which he is ashamed to have accepted.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

IASON
Quin potius ira concitum pectus doma, placare natis.

MEDEA
Abdico eiuro abnuo.
meis Creusa liberis fratres dabit?

IASON
Regina natis exulum, afflictis potens.

MEDEA
Non veniat umquam tam malus miseris dies qui prole foeda misceat prolem inclitam, Phoebi nepotes Sisyphi nepotibus.

IASON
Quid, misera, meque teque in exitium trahis?
abscede quaeo.

MEDEA
Sulplicem audivit Creo.

IASON
Quid facere possim, loquere.

MEDEA
Pro me? vel seclus

IASON
Hinc rex et illinc—
MEDEA

JASON
Nay, calm thy wrath-stirred heart; for thy sons' sake be reconciled.

MEDEA
I reject, forswear, disown them! Shall Creusa bear brothers to my children?

JASON
Yes, a queen, to the sons of exiles; a royal lady to the fallen.

MEDEA
Never may such ill day come to the wretched, as shall mingle a base breed with illustrious stock Phoebus' sons with the sons of Sisyphus.

JASON
Why, wretched woman, dost thou drag both me and thee to ruin? Begone, I pray thee.

MEDEA
Creon has heard my prayer.

JASON
What can I do? Tell me.

MEDEA
For me? Crime.

JASON
A king on this side and on that—
MEDEA
Est (et hic maior metus)
Medea. nos confligere. certemus sine, sit pretium Iason.

IASON
Cedo defessus malis.
et ipsa casus saepe iam expertos time.

MEDEA
Fortuna semper omnis infra me stetit.

IASON
Acastus instat.

MEDEA
Propior est hostis Creo;
utraque profuge. non ut in socerum manus
armes nec ut te caede cognata inquines
Medea cogit; innocens mecum fuge.

IASON
Et quis resistet, gemina si bella ingruant,
Creo atque Acastus arma si iungant sua?

MEDEA
His adice Colchos, adice et Aeeten ducem, Scythas Pelasgis iunge; demersos dabo.

IASON
Alta extimesco sceptrae.

1 Reading with Richter. Leo, Est et his maior metus:
Medea.
2 The text is obviously corrupt here. Nothing satisfactory has been made of nos confligere; Leo considers ll. 516–520 an interpolation; Page suggests conflige, used in active sense.

274
MEDEA

MEDEA

There is (and this more fearsome still) Medea. Let us\(^1\) strive together, and let the prize be Jason.

JASON

I yield, worn with trouble. And do thou thyself beware lest thou tempt fate too often.

MEDEA

Always has every fortune stood beneath my feet.

JASON

Acastus is hard after us.

MEDEA

Nearer foe is Creon; flee them both. That thou arm thy hand against thy father-in-law, and stain thyself with kindred\(^2\) blood, Medea does not compel thee; remain guiltless and escape with me.

JASON

And who will resist if double war assail us, if Creon and Acastus unite their arms?

MEDEA

Add the Colchians to these, add Aeetes, too, to lead them, join Scythians with Pelasgians; to destruction will I give them all.

JASON

I tremble at lofty sceptres.

\(^1\) \textit{i.e.} Creon and me. \hspace{1em} \(^2\) Acastus was Jason's cousin.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MEDEA

Ne cupias vide.

IASON

Suspecta ne sint, longa colloquia amputa. 530

MEDEA

Nunc summe toto Iuppiter caelo tona, intende dextram, vindices flammis para omnemque ruptis nubibus mundum quate, nec deligenti tela librentur manu vel me vel istum; quisquis e nobis cadet nocens peribit, non potest in nos tuum errare fulmen.

IASON

Sana meditari incipe et placida fare. si quod ex soceri domo potest fugam levare solamen, pete.

MEDEA

Contemnere animus regias, ut scis, opes potest soletque; liberos tantum fugae habere comites liceat in quorum sinu lacrimas profundam. te novi nati manent.

IASON

Parere precibus cupere me fateor tuis; pietas vetat; namque istud ut possim pati, non ipse memet cogat et rex et socer. haec causa vitae est, hoc perusti pectoris curis levamen. spiritu citius queam carere, membris, luce. 276
MEDEA

MEDEA

See that thou lust not after them.

JASON

Cut short this long discourse, lest it arouse suspicion.

MEDEA

Now, O most high Jupiter, thunder throughout thy heavens, stretch forth thy hand, thine avenging flames prepare, rend the clouds and make the whole world quake. Let thy bolts be poised with hand that chooseth neither me nor him; whichever of us falls will perish guilty; against us thy bolt can make no error.

JASON

Begin to think with reason, and speak with calm. If any solace from my father-in-law's house can soothe thy flight, request it.

MEDEA

To scorn the wealth of kings, my soul, as well thou knowest, hath strength and wont. I ask but this: that I may have my children as comrades of my flight, that in their bosoms I may pour forth my tears. Thee new sons await.

JASON

I confess that right gladly would I yield unto thy prayer, but a father's love forbids; for that I should permit this thing, not Creon himself, my king and father-in-law, could force me. This is my reason for living, this, my heart's comfort, consumed as it is with cares. Sooner could I part with breath, with limbs, with light.
SESi AE TRAGOEDiae

MEDEA

Sic natos amat?
bene est, tenetur, vulneri patuit locus.—
suprema certe liceat abeuntem loqui mandata, liceat ultimum amplexum dare;
gratam est et illud. voce iam extrema peto,
ne, si qua noster dubius effudit dolor,
maneant in animo verba; melioris tibi memoria nostri sedeat; haec irae data oblitterentur

IASON

Omnia ex animo expuli
precorque et ipse, fervidam ut mentem regas
placideque tractes; miserias lenit quies.

MEDEA

Discessit. itane est? vadis oblitus mei
et tot meorum facinorum? excidimus tibi?
numquam excidemus. hoc age, omnes advoca
vires et artes. fructus est scelerum tibi nullum scelus putare. vix fraudi est locus;
timemur. hac aggredere, qua nemo potest quicquam timere. perge nunc, aude, incipe
quidquid potest Medea, quidquid non potest.

Tu, fida nutrix, socia maeroris mei
variique casus, misera consilia adiuva.
est palla nobis, munus aetherium, domus decusque regni, pignus Aeetae datum
a Sole generis, est et auro textili monile fulgens quodque gemmarum nitor

278
MEDEA

MEDEA [aside]

Thus does he love his sons? 'Tis well! I have him! The place to wound him is laid bare. [To JASON.] As I depart, my final message, at least, grant me to speak; grant me to give the last embrace; e'en that will be a boon. With my latest utterance I beg thee now; let not any words my distracted grief has poured forth remain within thy mind; let the memory of my better self stay with thee, and let these words spoken in wrath be quite forgot.

JASON

All have I driven from my mind, and I also make prayer to thee that thou curb thy hot passion and be calm; peace soothes the soul's distresses. [Exit.

MEDEA

He has gone! Can it be so? Goest thou, forgetful of me and of all the deeds I wrought? Have we fallen from thy memory? Nay, we shall never fall therefrom. [To herself.] To thy task; summon up all thy powers and arts. The fruit of thy crimes is to count nothing crime. There is scant room for fraud; we are held in fear. There make attack where no one can fear aught. Haste thee now, dare, begin whatever Medea can—and cannot—do.

[To the nurse.]

568 Do thou, faithful nurse, comrade of my grief and of my shifting fortunes, help my unhappy plannings. I have a robe, a gift from heaven, the glory of our house and kingdom, given by the Sun to Aeetes as a pledge of fatherhood; there is also a gleaming necklace of woven gold and a golden band which the distinguit aurum, quo solent cangi comae.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

haec nostra nati dona nubenti ferant,
sed ante diris inlita ac tincta artibus.
vocetur Hecate. sacra letisica appara;
statuantur arae, flamma iam tectis sonet.

CHORVS

Nulla vis flammae tumidine venti
quanta cum coniunx viduata taedis
ardet et odit;
non ubi hibernos nebulosus imbres
Auster advexit properatque torrens Hister et iunctos vetat esse pontes
ac vagus errat;
non ubi impellit Rhodanus profundum,
ant ubi in rivos nivibus solutis
sole iam forti medioque vere
Histeret iunctos vetat esse pontes.

caecus est ignis stimulatus ira nec regi curat patiturve frenos aut timet mortem; cupit ire in ipsos obvius enses.

Parcite, o divi, veniam precamur,
vivat ut tutus mare qui subegit;
sed furit vinci dominus profundi
regna secunda.

ausus aeternos agitare currus
immemor metae iuvenis paternae quos polo sparsit furiosus ignes ipse recepit.
sparkle of gems adorns, with which the hair is encircled. Let my sons bring these as gifts unto the bride, but let them first be anointed and imbued with baneful poisons. Now call on Hecate. Prepare the death-dealing rites; let altars be erected, and let now their fires resound within the palace.

CHORUS

No violence of fire or of swelling gale, no fearful force of hurtling spear, is as great as when a wife, robbed of her love, burns hot with hate; not when cloudy Auster has brought the winter's rains, and Hister's floods speeds on, wrecking bridges in its course, and wanders afield; not when the Rhone beats back the sea, or when the snows melt into streams beneath the sun's strong rays and in mid-spring Haemus has dissolved. Blind is the fire of love when fanned by rage, cares not to be controlled, brooks no restraint, has no fear of death; 'tis eager to advance even against the sword.

595 Have mercy, O gods, be gracious, we beseech you, that he 1 may live in safety who tamed the sea;
but the lord 2 of the deep is enraged that the second realm is conquered. The youth 3 who dared drive the everlasting chariot, heedless of his father's goal, himself caught the fire which in his madness he scattered o'er the sky. The familiar path has cost

1 Jason, who first ventured on the sea in the Argo; cf.
ll. 318 ff.
2 Neptune. Jupiter is lord of the sky, Neptune of the sea, and Pluto of the underworld.
3 Phaëthon.
constitit nulli via nota magno;
vade qua tutum populo priori,
rumpe nec sacro, violente, sancta
foedera mundi.

Quisquis audacis tetigit carinae
nobiles remos nemorisque sacri Pelion densa spoliavit umbra, quisquis intravit scopulos vagantes et tot emensus pelagi labores barbara funem religavit ora raptor externi rediturus auri, exitu diro temerata ponti
iura piavit.

Exigit poenas mare provocatum.
Tiphys in primis, domitor profundi,
liquit indocto regimen magistro;
litore externo, procul a paternis
occidens regnis tumuloque vili
tectus ignotas iacet inter umbras.
Aulis amissi memor inde regis portibus lentis retinet carinas stare querentes.

Ille vocali genitus Camena,
cuius ad chordas modulante plectro
restitit torrens, siluere venti,
cum suo cantu volucris relictro
adfuit tota comitante silva, Thracios sparsus iacuit per agros,
at caput tristi fluitavit Hebro;
contigit notam Styga Tartarumque,
non rediturus.
no mortal dear; walk thou where 'twas safe for folk aforetime, nor break, rash man, the inviolable covenants of the universe.

607 Whoever handled that daring ship's famous oars and despoiled Pelion of his sacred grove's thick shade, whoever entered between the roaming rocks and, having passed the perils of the deep, moored his vessel on a savage shore, to return captor of foreign gold—all by a dreadful end atoned for the sea's outraged laws.

616 Punishment the challenged ocean claims. First of all, Tiphys, the tamer of the deep, gave up control to an untrained helmsman; dying on a foreign shore, far from his ancestral realm, in a paltry tomb he lies midst unfamiliar shades. For this, Aulis, remembering her lost king, in her becalmed harbour holds ships chafing at delay.²

625 That son of the tuneful Muse, at whose sweet melodies the swift stream stood still and the winds were hushed, when the bird, leaving off its own singing, came near him, the whole wood following after—he lay scattered over the Thracian fields, but his head floated down mournful Hebrus; he came to the familiar ⁴ Styx and Tartarus, never to return.

¹ The Symplegades.
² i.e. Aulis, long after this event, keeps the Greek fleet back from Troy, as if thus taking vengeance on that first fleet which robbed her of her king.
³ Orpheus.
⁴ Orpheus had visited the lower world once before.
Stravit Alcides Aquilone natos, patre Neptuno genitum necavit
sumere innumeram solutum figuram;
ipse post terrae pelagique pacem,
post feri Ditis patefacta regna,
vivus ardentem recubans in Oeta
praebuit saevis sua membra flammis, tabe consumptus geminis cruoris
munere nuptae.

Stravit Ancaenum violentus ictu saetiger; fratrem, Meleagre, matris impius mactas morerisque dextra matris iratae. meruere cuncti
morte quod crimen tener expiavit Herculi magno puere inrepetus, raptus, heu, tutas puere inter undas.
ite nunc, fortes, perarate pontum
fonte timendo.

Idmonem, quamvis bene fata nosset,
condidit serpens Libycis harenis;
omnibus verax, sibi falsus uni,
concidit Mopsus caruitque Thebis.
ille si vere cecinit futura,
exul errabit Thetidis maritum.
igne fallaci nociturus Argis Nauplius praeceps cadet in profundum;
occidet proles, patrioque pendet
crimine poenas;

\footnote{1 Leo deletes this line, but reads erravit with \ensuremath{\omega}. Richter retains line and reads erravit.}
\footnote{2 Leo supplies occidet proles.}
634 Alcides laid low the sons of Aquilo, he slew Neptune's son two, and gave his body to the devouring flames, consumed by the wasting of the double blood, his wife's offering.

643 The bristling boar, irresistible in his thrust, laid Ancaeus low; thou, Meleager, dost impiously slay thy mother's brother and diest by thine enraged mother's hand. All these deserved the charge for which that tender boy, sought vainly by mighty Hercules, atoned by death—the boy snatched away, alas, midst peaceful waters. Go now, ye brave, plough up the sea, whose streams ye ought to dread.

652 Idmon, though he well knew his fate, was slain by a serpent on Libya's sands; true to all, but false to himself alone, Mopsus fell and saw not Thebes again. If he told truth as to the future, Thetis' husband shall in exile wander. Nauplius, while striving to wreck the Argives by false beacon fires, shall fall headlong into the deep; his son shall perish and pay the penalty of his father's sin; Oileus, Zetes and Calais.

1 Zetes and Calais.
2 Periclymenus.
3 i.e. the commingled blood of the hydra and of Nessus; see Index s.v. "Nessus."
4 The Calydonian boar.
5 i.e. of violating the sea.
6 Hylas.
7 He could foresee the fate of others, as of Peleus, but could not foresee and guard against his own.
8 Mopsus.
9 Peleus.
10 Palamedes.
11 i.e. of joining in the Argonautic expedition.
12 Ajax; the father's name is put in place of the son's.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

fulmine et ponto moriens Oileus;
coniugis fatum redimens Pheraei
uxor, impendens animam marito.
ipse qui praedam spoliumque iussit
aureum prima revehi cariua, ustus accenso Pelias aeno
arsit angustas vagus inter undas.
iam satis, divi, mare vindicatis;
parcite iusso.

NVTRIX

Pavet animus, horret, magna pernicies adest. 670
immane quantum augescit et semen dolor
accendit ipse vimque praeteritam integrat.
vidi furentem saepe et aggressam deos,
caelum trahentem; maius his, maius parat Medea monstrum. namque ut attonito gradu evasit et penetrale funestum attigit, totas opes effundit et quidquid diu
etiam ipsa timuit promit atque omnem explicat turbam malorum, arcana secreta abdita, et triste laeva comprecans¹ sacrum manu 680 pestes vocat quascumque ferventis creat
harena Libyae quasque perpetua nive
Taurus cohercet frigore Arctoo rigens, et omne monstrum. tracta magicis cantibus
squamifera latebris turba desertis adest.
hic saeva serpens corpus immensum trahit trifidamque linguam exertat et quaerit quibus mortifera veniat; carmine audito stupet tumidumque nodis corpus aggestis plicat cogitque in orbes. "parva sunt" inquit "mala

¹ So Leo, with E: complicans A: congregans Richter: comparans Buecheler: comprimens Koetschau.

286
too, dying midst flame and flood; redeeming from death her lord of Pherae, the wife shall perish, giving up her life for her husband’s sake. Pelias himself, who bade the prize of the golden spoil be brought away in the first ship, seething in boiling pot, wandering midst waters close confined, perished by fire. Enough now, ye gods, have ye avenged the sea; spare him who was ordered to the task.

NURSE [alone]

My spirit quakes with horror; some great disaster is at hand. Monstrously grows her grief, feeds its own fires and renews its former strength. Often have I seen her in frenzy and assailing the gods, drawing down the sky; but greater than such deeds, greater is the monstrous thing Medea is preparing. For now that with maddened steps she has gone out and come to her baleful shrine, she lavishes all her stores and brings forth whatever e’en she herself long has dreaded, and marshals her whole train of evil powers, things occult, mysterious, hidden; and, supplicating the grim altar with her left hand, she summons destructive agencies, whatever burning Libya’s sands produce, what Taurus, stiff with arctic cold, holds fast in his everlasting snows, and all monstrous things. Drawn by her magic incantations, the scaly brood leave their lairs and come to her. Here a savage serpent drags its huge length along, darts out its forked tongue, and seeks against whom it is to come death-dealing; hearing her incantation, it stops in amaze, knots its swollen body into writhing folds, and settles them into coils. “Petty are the evils,” she cries, “and cheap is the weapon which

1 Admetus.
2 Alcestis.
3 Jason.
4 i.e. the sun and moon.
et vile telum est, ima quod tellus creat;
caelo petam venena. iam iam tempus est aliquid movere fraude vulgari altius.
huc ille vasti more torrentis iacens
descendat anguis, cuius immensos duae, maior minorque, sentiunt nodos ferae (maior Pelasgis apta, Sidoniis minor) pressasque tandem solvat Ophiuchus manus virusque fundat; adsit ad cantus meos lacessere ausus gemina Python numina.
et Hydra et omnis redeat Herculea manu
succisa serpens, caede se reparans sua.
tu quoque relictis pervigil Colchis ades,
sopite primum cantibus, serpens, meis.”

Postquam evocavit omne serpentum genus, congerit in unum frugis infaustae mala.
quaecumque generat invius saxis Eryx, quae fert opertis hieme perpetua iugis
sparsus cruore Caucasus Promethei,
et quis sagittas divites Arabes linunt
pharetraque pugnax Medus aut Parthi leves, aut quos sub axe frigido sucos legunt
lucis Suebae nobiles Hyrcaniis;
quodcumque tellus vere nidifico creat
aut rigida cum iam bruma discussit deus nemorum et nivali cuncta constrinxit gelu, quodcumque gramen flore mortifero viret,
quicumque tortis sucus in radicibus
causas nocendi gignit, attrectat manu.
deepest earth begets; from heaven will I seek my poisons. Now, now is the time to set in motion some plan deeper than common guile. Hither let that serpent\(^1\) descend which lies like a vast rushing stream, whose huge folds the two beasts\(^2\) feel, the greater and the less (the greater used\(^3\) by Pelasgi ans; by Sidonians, the less); let Ophiuchus at length relax his choking grip and give the poison vent; in answer to my incantations let Python come, who dared to attack the twin divinities.\(^4\) Let Hydra return and every serpent cut off by the hand of Hercules, restoring itself by its own destruction.\(^5\) Thou, too, ever-watchful dragon,\(^6\) quitting the Colchians, come thou to my aid, thou who through my incantations wast first lulled to slumber.\(^7\)

When she had summoned forth the whole tribe of serpents, she assembled her evil store of baleful herbs. Whatever trackless Eryx produces on his rocky slopes; plants that grow on heights clothed in unbroken winter, the heights of Caucasus, spatted ered with Prometheus' gore; plants wherewith the rich Arabians smear their arrows, and the bold Mede, girt with his quiver, or the light-armed Parthians; or those juices which, under the cold pole, high-born Sueban women gather in Hyrcanian groves; whatever the earth produces in the nest-building spring-time or when frozen winter has stripped the woods of their glory and bound all things with icy fetters; all plants that bloom with deadly flower, and all whose juices breed cause of death in their twisted

\(^1\) The constellation Draco, winding between the two Bears.
\(^2\) The Bears.
\(^3\) i.e. as a fixed point in sailing.
\(^4\) Apollo and Diana.
\(^5\) See Index s.v. “Hydra.”
\(^6\) Which guarded the golden fleece.
Haemonius illas contulit pestes Athos, 720
has Pindus ingens, illa Pangaei iugis teneram cruenta falce deposit conam;
has aluit altum gurgitem Tigris premens, Danuvius illas, has per arenites plagas
tepidis Hydaspes gemmifer currens aquis, nomenque terris qui dedit Baetis suis Hesperia pulsans maria languenti vado.
haec passa ferrum est, dum parat Phoebus diem;
illius alta nocte succisus frutex;
at huius ungue secta cantato seges.

Mortifera carpit gramina ae serpentium
saniem exprimit miscetque et obscenas aves maestique cor bubonis et raucae strigis exsecta vivae viscera. haec scelerum artifex discreta ponit; his rapax vis ignium,
his gelida pigri frigoris glacies inest.
addit venenis verba non illis minus metuenda.—sonuit ecce vesano gradu
canitque. mundus vocibus primis tremit.

MEDEA

Comprecor vulgus silentum vosque ferales dcos 740
et Chaos caccum atque opacam Ditis umbrosi domum, Tartari ripis ligatos squalidae Mortis specus.¹
supplicis, animae, remissis currite ad thalamos novos:
rola resistat membra torquens, tangat Ixion humum, Tantalus securus undas hauriat Pirenidas. 745

¹ Peifer puts full stop after domum, and corrects ligatae
squalido: *M specu | supplicis . . .

290
MEDEA

roots—all these she handles. Haemonian Athos contributed those baneful herbs, these, mighty Pindus; on the ridges of Pangaeus that plant was lopped of its tender foliage with a bloody sickle; these Tigris fed, checking his deep flood the while; the Danube, those; these, gem-studded Hydaspes, flowing with warm waters through thirsty tracts, and the Baetis, which gave its name to its own country, pushing into the western sea with languorous flood. These plants felt the knife while Phoebus was making ready the day; the shoot of that was clipped at midnight; while this was severed by finger-nail with muttered charm.

She seizes death-dealing herbs, squeezezs out serpents’ venom, and with these minglez unclean birds, the heart of a boding owl, and a hoarse screech-owl’s vitals cut out alive. Other objects the mistress of evil arts lays out, arranged in separate heaps; in some is the ravening power of fire; in others numbing frost’s icy cold. She adds to her poisons words, no less fearsome than they.—But listen, her frenzied step has sounded, and she chants her incantations. All nature shudders as she begins her song.

[Enter medea, singing an incantation.]

MEDEA

I supplicate the throng of the silent, and you, funereal gods, murky Chaos and shadowy Dis’ dark dwelling-place, the abysses of dismal Death, girt by the banks of Tartarus. Leaving your punishments, ye ghosts, haste to the new nuptials; let the wheel stop that is whirling his body, and Ixion stand on earth; let Tantalus in peace drink his fill of the 1Provincia Baetica, in Spain.

vos quoque, urnis quas foratis inritus ludit labor, Danaides, coite: vestras hic dies quaeferit manus. gravior uni poena sedeat coniugis socero mei: lubricus per saxa retro Sisyphum volvat lapis.¹

Nunc meis vocata saecris, noctium sidus, veni pessimos induta vultus, fronte non una minax.

Tibi more gentis vinculo solvens comam secreta nudum nemora lustravi pede et evocavi nubibus siccis aquas egique ad imum maria, et Oceanus graves interius undas aestibus victis dedit; pariterque mundus lege confusa aetheris et solem et astra vidit, et vetitum mare tetigistis, ursae. temporum flexi vices: aestiva tellus floruit cantu meo, coacta messem vidit hibernam Ceres; violenta Phasis vertit in fontem vada et Hister, in tot ora divisus, truces compressit undas omnibus ripis piger. sonuere fluctus, tumuit insanum mare tacente vento; nemoris antiqui domus amisit umbras, vocis imperio meae die reducto; Phoebus in medio stetit Hyadesque nostris cantibus motae labant: adesse sacris tempus est, Phoebé, tuis.

¹ The transposed order of ll. 746-749 is Bothe’s: Richter follows this: Leo, the traditional order.
MEDEA

Pirenian spring. You, too, whom a fruitless toil mocks with urns full of holes, ye Danaids, come hither: this day needs your hands. On one alone, my lord's new father, let a penalty rest heavier—let the slippery stone roll Sisyphus \(^1\) backward o'er the rocks.

Now, summoned by my sacred rites, do thou,\(^2\) orb of the night, put on thy most evil face and come, threatening in all thy forms.\(^3\)

For thee, loosing my hair from its bands after the manner of my people, with bare feet have I trod the secret groves and called forth rain from the dry clouds; I have driven the seas back to their lowest depths, and the Ocean, his tides outdone, has sent his crushing waves farther into the land; and in like manner, with heaven's law confounded, the world has seen both sun and stars together, and you, ye bears, have bathed in the forbidden sea.\(^4\)

The order of the seasons have I changed: the summer land has blossomed 'neath my magic song, and by my compelling Ceres has seen harvest in winter-time; Phasis has turned his swift waters backward to their source, and Hister, divided into many mouths, has checked his boisterous streams and flowed sluggishly in all his beds. The waves have roared, the mad sea swelled, though the winds were still; the heart of the ancient woods has lost its shadows, when the bright day has come back to them at commandment of my voice; Phoebus has halted in mid-heaven, and the Hyades, moved by my incantations, totter to their fall.

The hour is at hand, O Phoebe, for thy sacred rites.

\[^{[She\ offers\ various\ gifts\ to\ Hecate.]}\]

\(^1\) Sisyphus was father of Creon, and he alone is not to be relieved of his toil. This toil is even to be increased, and so bring greater anguish to Creon.

\(^2\) Hecate as the moon-goddess.

\(^3\) Hecate is triformis, triceps.

\(^4\) See Index s.v. "Bears."

293
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Tibi haec cruenta serta texuntur manu,
   novena quae serpens ligat,
tibi haec Typhoeus membra quae discors tulit,
   qui regna concussit Iovis.
vectoris istic perfidi sanguis inest,
   quem Nessus expirans dedit.
Oetaeus isto cinere defecit rogus,
   qui virus Herculeum bibit.
piae sororis, impiae matris, facem
   ultricis Althaeae vides.
reliquit istas invio plumas specu Harpyia, dum Zeten fugit.
his adice pinnas sauciae Stymphalidos Lernaea passae spicula.
sonuistis, arae, tripodas agnosco meos
   favente commotos dea.

Video Triviae currus agiles,
non quos pleno lucida vultu pernox agitat, sed quos facie lurida maesta, cum Thessalicis
   vexata minis caelum freno propriore legit. sic face tristem pallida lucem funde per auras, horrore novo terre populos
   inque auxilium, Dictynna, tuum pretiosa sonent aera Corinthi.
tibi sanguineo caespite sacrum sollemne damus, tibi de medio rapta sepulchro fax nocturnos sustulit ignes, tibi mota caput
   flexa voces cervice dedi,
tibi funereo de more iacens
   passos cingit vitta capillos,
MEDEA

771 To thee I offer these wreaths wrought with bloody hands, each entwined with nine serpent coils; to thee, these serpent limbs which rebellious Typhoeus wore, who caused Jove's throne to tremble. In this is the blood which Nessus, that traitor ferryman, bestowed as he expired. With these ashes the pyre on Oeta sank down which drank in the poisoned blood of Hercules. Here thou seest the billet 1 of a pious sister but impious mother, Althaea, the avenger. These feathers the Harpy left in her trackless lair when she fled from Zetes. Add to these the quills of the wounded Stymphalian bird which felt the darts of Lerna.2—You have given forth your voice, ye altars; I see my tripods shaken by the favouring deity.

787 I see Trivia's swift gliding car, not as when, radiant, with full face, she drives the livelong night, but as when, ghastly, with mournful aspect, harried by Thessalian threats, she skirts with nearer rein the edge of heaven. So do thou wanly shed from thy torch a gloomy light through air; terrify the peoples with new dread, and let precious Corinthian bronzes resound, Dictynna, to thy aid.3 To thee on the altar's bloody turf we perform thy solemn rites; to thee a torch caught up from the midst of a funeral pyre has illumined the night; to thee, tossing my head and with bended neck, I have uttered my magic words; for thee a fillet, lying in funeral fashion, binds my flowing locks; to thee is brandished the gloomy

1 See Index s.v. "Althaea."
2 i.e. the arrows of Hercules, poisoned with the gall of the Lernaean hydra.
3 The moon in eclipse was supposed to be suffering under the spell of magic, which spell might be removed by beating on brazen vessels and by making other loud noises.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

sibi iactatur tristis Stygia
ramus ab unda, sibi nudato pectore maenas sacro feriam brachia cultro. manet noster sanguis ad aras; assuesce, manus, stringere ferrum carosque pati posse cruores—sacrum laticem percussa dedi.

Quodsi nimium saepe vocari
quereris votis, ignosce precor;
causa vocandi, Persei, tuos
saepius arcus una atque eadem est semper, Iason.

Tu nunc vestes tinge Creusae,
quas cum primum sumpserit, imas
urat serpentem flamma medullas.
ignis fulvo clusus in auro
latet obscurus, quem mihi caeli qui furta luit viscere feto dedit et docuit condere vires arte, Prometheus. dedit et tenui sulphure tecto; Mulciber ignes, et vivacis fulgura flammae
de cognato Phaethonte tuli.
habeo mediae dona Chimaerae,
habeo flammas usto tauri
guttature raptas, quas permixto felle Medusae tacitum iussi servare malum.

Adde venenis stimulos, Hecate,
donisque meis semina flammae
condita serva. fallant visus
tactusque ferant, meet in pectus

1 Of the yew or cypress, trees naturally connected with death and the world of death.

296
branch ¹ from the Stygian stream; to thee with bared breast will I as a maenad smite my arms with the sacrificial knife. Let my blood flow upon the altars; accustom thyself, my hand, to draw the sword and endure the sight of beloved blood. [She slashes her arm and lets the blood flow upon the altar.] Self-smitten have I poured forth the sacred stream.

812 But if thou complainest that too often thou art called on by my prayers, pardon, I pray; the cause, O Perses' daughter,² of my too oft calling on thy bows is one and the same ever, Jason.

817 Do thou now [she takes a phial] poison Creusa's robe that, when she has donned it, the creeping flame may consume her inmost marrow. Within this tawny gold [she takes a casket] lurks fire, darkly hid; Prometheus gave it me, even he who expiates with ever-growing liver his theft from heaven, and taught me by his art how to store up its powers. Mulciber hath also given me fires which subtly lurk in sulphur; and bolts of living flame I took from my kinsman,³ Phaëthon. I have gifts from Chimaera's middle part,⁴ I have flames caught from the bull's scorched throat, which, well mixed with Medusa's gall, I have bidden to guard their bane in silence.

833 Give sting to my poisons, Hecate, and in my gifts keep hidden the seeds of fire. Let them cheat the sight, let them endure the touch; let burning fire

² i.e. Hecate; the bow is typical of her aid in magic.
³ Both Medea and Phaëthon were descended from Phoebus.
⁴ i.e. the goat part, which vomited fire.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

venasque calor, stillent artus ossaque fument vincatque suas flagrante coma nova nupta faces.

Vota tenentur; ter latratus audax Hecate dedit et sacros edidit ignes face lucifera.

Peracta vis est omnis; hoc natos voca,
pretiosa per quos dona nubenti feras.
ite, ite, nati, matris infaustae genus,
placate vobis munere et multa prece dominam ac novercam. vadite et celeres domum referte gressus, ultimo amplexu ut fruar.

CHORVS

Quonam cruenta maenas
praeeeps amore saevo
rapitur? quod impotenti
facinus parat furore?
vultus citatus ira
riget et caput feroci
quatiens superba motu
regi minatur ultro.
quis credat exulem?

Flagrant genae rubentes,
pallor fugat ruborem,
nullum vagante forma
servat diu colorem.
huc fert pedes et illuc,
ut tigris orba natis
cursu furente lustrat Gangeticum nemus,
penetrate to heart and veins; let her limbs melt and her bones consume in smoke, and with her blazing locks let the bride outshine her wedding torches.

840 My prayers are heard: thrice has bold Hecate bayed loud, and has raised her accursed fire with its baleful light.

843 Now all my power is marshalled; hither call my sons that by their hands thou mayst send these costly gifts unto the bride.

[MEDEA'S SONS ARE BROUGHT IN.]

Go, go, my sons, born of an ill-starred mother, win to yourselves by means of gifts and much beseeching your mistress and stepmother. Begone and quickly come you home again, that I may enjoy one last embrace.

[EXEUNT SONS TOWARDS THE PALACE; MEDEA IN THE OPPOSITE DIRECTION.]

CHORUS

Whither is this blood-stained maenad borne headlong by mad passion? What crime with reckless fury is she preparing? Her distraught face is hard set in anger, and with fierce tossings of her head she haughtily threatens e'en the king. Who would think her an exile?

858 Her cheeks blaze red, pallor puts red to flight; no colour in her changing aspect does she keep long. Hither and thither she wanders, as a tigress, robbed of her cubs, ranges in mad course through the jungles of Ganges.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Frenare nescit iras Medea, non amores;
nunc ira amorque causam
iunxere; quid sequetur?
quando efferet Pelasgis
nepanda Colchis arvis
gressum metuque solvet
regnum simulque reges?
nunc, Phoebe, mitte currus
nullo morante loro,
nox condat alma lucem,
merget diem timendum
dux noctis Hesperus.

NVNTIVS

Periere cuncta! concidit regni status!
nata atque genitor cinere permixto iacent.

CHORVS

Qua fraude capti?

NVNTIVS

Qua solent reges capi—
donis.

CHORVS

In illis esse quis potuit dolus?

NVNTIVS

Et ipse miror vixque iam facto malo
potuisse fieri credo. quis cladis modus?
avidus per omnem regiae partem furit
ut iussus ignis; iam domus tota occidit, urbi timetur.

300
How to curb her anger Medea knows not, nor yet her love; now that anger and love have joined cause, what will the outcome be? When will the wicked Colchian be gone from the Pelasgian borders and free from terror at once our kingdom and our kings? Now, O Phoebus, speed thy chariot with no check of rein; let friendly darkness veil the light, and let Hesperus, vanguard of the night, plunge deep this fearful day.

[Enter messenger, running from the direction of the palace.]

MESSENGER
All is lost! The kingdom’s props have fallen Daughter and father in commingled ashes lie.

CHORUS
By what snare taken?

MESSENGER
By the common snare of kings—by gifts.

CHORUS
What snare could have been in them?

MESSENGER
Myself, I also marvel, and, though the woeful thing is done, can scarce believe it could be done. What stay is there to ruin? The greedy fire rages through the palace’s every part as if ’twere bidden so. Already the whole house has fallen, the city is in peril.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

CHORVS
Vnda flammis opprimat.

NVNTIVS

Et hoc in ista clade mirandum accidit:
alit unda flammis, quoque prohibetur magis,
magis ardet ignis; ipsa praesidia occupat.

NVTRIX

Effer citatum sede Pelopea gradum,
Medea, praeceps quaslibet terras pete.

MEDEA

Egone ut recedam? si profugisset prius,
ad hoc redirem. nuptias specto novas.
quid, anime, cessas? sequere felicem impetum.
pars ultionis ista, qua gaudes, quota est?
amas adhuc, furiose, si satis est tibi caelibs Iason. quaere poenarum genus haut usitatum iamque sic temet para:
fas omne cedat, abcat expulsus pudor;
vindicata levis est quam ferunt purae manus.
incumbe in iras teque languentem excita penitusque veteres pectore ex imo impetus violentus hauri. quidquid admissum est adhuc, pietas vocetur. hoc age et faxis sciant
quam levia fuerint quamque vulgaris notae
MEDEA

CHORUS

Let water put out the flames.

MESSENGER

Nay, in this disaster this marvel, too, has happened: water feeds the flames, and the more 'tis checked, the more fiercely burns the fire; the very defences doth it seize upon.

[Enter MEDEA, in time to hear the last words.]

NURSE [to MEDEA]

Quickly begone, Medea, from the land of Pelops; seek headlong any land thou wilt!

MEDEA

What I—shall I give ground? Nay, had I fled already, for this I should return. Strange nuptials see I here.

[She becomes absorbed in her own thoughts.]

Why, soul, dost falter? Follow up the attack so well begun. How small a part of thy vengeance is that in which thou art rejoicing! Thou dost love him still, mad one, if 'tis enough for thee that Jason wifeless be. Seek thou some unaccustomed form of chastisement, and now thus prepare thyself: let all right give way; let honour begone, defeated; light is the rod which innocent hands uplift. Bend to thine anger, rouse up thy halting purpose, and with all thy strength drain from thy heart's very depths its old-time violence. Let all that has yet been done be called but piety. To the task; let them know how petty, of what common stamp, were the crimes

1 Water, the natural defence against fire.
quae commodavi scelera. prolusit dolor
per ista noster; quid manus poterant rudes
audere magnum? quid puellaris furor?
Medea nunc sum; crevit ingenium malis.

Iuvat, iuvat rapuisse fraternum caput;
artus iuvat secuisses et arcano patrem
spoliasse sacro, iuvat in exitium senis armasse natas. quaere materiam, dolor;
ad omne facinus non rudem dextram afferes.

Quo te igitur, ira, mittis, aut quae perfido
intendis hosti tela? nescio quid ferox decrevit animus intus et nondum sibi audet fateri. stulta properavi nimis—
ex paelice utinam liberos hostis meus
aliquos haberet! quidquid ex illo tuum est, Creusa peperit. placuit hoc poenae genus, meritoque placuit; ultimum, agnosco, scelus
animo parandum est. liberi quondam mei,
vos pro paternis sceleribus poenas date.

Cor pepulit horror, membra torpescunt gelu pectusque tremuit. ira discexit loco materque tota coniuge expulsae redit.
egone ut meorum liberum ac prolis meae
fundam cruorem? melius, a, demens furor!
in cognitum istud facinus ac dirum nefas
a me quoque absit; quod scelus miser luent?
sceleus est Iason genitor et maius scelus Medea mater. occidant, non sunt mei;
pereant—mei sunt. crimine et culpa carent, 304
I wrought to serve him. In them my grief was but practising; what great deed had prentice hands the power to do? What, a girl's rage? Now I am Medea; my wit has grown through suffering.

Glad am I, glad, that I tore off my brother's head, glad that I carved his limbs, that I robbed my father of his guarded treasure, glad that I armed daughters for an old man's death. Seek thou fresh fields, my grief; no untrained hand wilt thou bring to any crime.

Whither, then, wrath, art tending, or what weapons art thou aiming at the forsworn foe? A dark purpose my fierce spirit hath resolved within me, and dares not yet acknowledge to itself. Fool! fool! I have gone too fast—would that mine enemy had children by his paramour! [She pauses and then addresses herself:] All offspring that thou hast by him are Creusa's brood. Resolved is this way of vengeance, rightly resolved; for a last deed of guilt, I see it now, must my soul make ready. Children that once were mine, do you pay penalty for your father's crimes.

Horror has smit my heart! My limbs are numb with cold and my heart with terror flutters. Wrath has given place; the mother has all come back, the wife is banished. Can I shed my children's, my own offspring's blood? Ah, mad rage, say not so! Far, even from me, be that unheard-of deed, that accursed guilt! What sin will the poor boys atone? Their sin is that Jason is their father, and, greater sin, that Medea is their mother. [She pauses.] Let them die, they are none of mine; let them be lost—they are my own. They are without crime and guilt, yea, they are

---

1 The golden fleece. 2 i.e. of Pelias. 3 Jason.
sunt innocentes—fateor, et frater fuit.

quid, anime, titubas? ora quid lacrimae rigant

variamque nunc hue ira, nunc illuc amor didueit? ances acstus incertam rapit;
ut saeva rapida bella cum venti gerunt

utrimque fluctus maria discordes agunt dubiumque fervet pelagus, haut aliter meum

cor fluctuatur. ira pietatem fugat

iramque pietas. cede pietati, dolor.

Huc, cara proles, unicum afflictae domus

solamen, hue vos ferete et infusos mihi

coniungite artus. habeat incolumes pater,
dum et mater habeat. urget exilium ac fuga.
i am i am meo rapientur avulsi e sinu,
flentes, gementes osculis. periant patri,

periere matri. rursus increcit dolor

et fervet odium, repetit invitam manum

antiqua Eriny. ira, qua ducis, sequor.

utinam superbae turba Tantalidos meo

exisset utero bisque septenos parens

natos tulisse! sterilis in poenas fui—fratri patrique quod sat est, peperi duos.

Quonam ista tendit turba Furiarum impotens?
quem quaerit aut quo flammeos ictus parat,
aut cui cruentas agmen infernun faces

intentat? ingens anguis excusso sonat tortus flagello. quem trabe infesta petit

Megaera? cuius umbra dispersis venit

incerta membris? frater est, poenas petit.

306
innocent—I acknowledge it; so, too, was my brother. Why, soul, dost hesitate? Why are my cheeks wet with tears? Why do anger and love now hither, now thither draw my changeful heart? A double tide tosses me, uncertain of my course; as when rushing winds wage mad warfare, and from both sides conflicting floods lash the seas and the fluctuating waters boil, even so is my heart tossed. Anger puts love to flight, and love, anger. O wrath, yield thee to love.

Hither, dear children, sole comfort of my fallen house, come hither and link your entwining limbs with mine. Let your father have you unharmed, so but your mother may have you too. But exile and flight press hard upon me; now, now will they be torn from my bosom and carried away from me, midst tears and sighs and kisses.—Let them be lost to their father; they are lost to me. My grief grows again and my hate burns hot; Erinyes, as of old, claims my unwilling hand. O wrath, where thou dost lead I follow. I would that from my womb the throng of proud Niobe had sprung, and that I had been the mother of twice seven sons! Too barren have I been for vengeance—yet for my brother and my father there is enough, for I have borne two sons.

Whither hastes that headlong horde of Furies? Whom seek they? Against whom are they preparing their flaming blows? Whom does the hellish host threaten with its bloody brands? A huge snake hisses, whirled with the writhing lash. Whom does Megaera seek with her deadly torch? Whose shade comes there dimly seen, its limbs all scattered? It is my brother, and 'tis punishment he seeks. We'll pay, yes, all the debt. Plunge your brands into dabimus, sed omnes. fige luminibus faces, lania, perure, pectus en Furiis patet.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Discedere a me, frater, ultrices deas manesque ad imos ire securas iube; mihi me relinque et utere hac, frater, manu quae strinxit ens—victima manes tuos placamus ista.—quid repens affert sonus? parantur arma meque in exitium petunt. excelsa nostrae tecta conseendam domus caede incohata. perge tu mecum comes. tuum quoque ipsa corpus hinc mecum aveham. nunc hoc age, anime; non in occulto tibi est perdenda virtus; approba populo manum.

IASON

Quicumque regum cladibus fidus doles, concurre, ut ipsam sceleris auctorem horridi capiamus. huc, huc fortis armiferi cohors conferte tela, vertite ex imo domum.

MEDEA

Iam iam recepi sceptrum germanum patrem, spoliunque Colchi pecudis auratae tenent; rediere regna, rapta virginitas redit. o placida tandem numina, o festum diem, o nuptiale! vade, perfectum est scelus;
MEDEA

my eyes, tear, burn; see, my breast is open to the Furies.

[967] O brother, bid the avenging goddesses depart from me, and go in peace to the deep-buried ghosts; to myself leave me and use this hand, brother, which has drawn the sword— [She slays the first son.] With this victim I appease thy ghost.—What means that sudden noise? 'Tis arms they are making ready, and they seek me for my slaying. To the lofty roof of our palace will I mount, now the bloody work hath been begun. [To her remaining son.] Do thou come with me. [To her dead son.] Thy corpse also will I take hence with me. Now to the task, O soul; not in secrecy must thy great deed be lost; to the people approve thy handiwork.

[Exit MEDEA, carrying the body of her dead son and leading the living. Enter JASON in the street below shouting to the citizens.]

JASON

Ye faithful souls, who mourn your princes' doom, rally to me that we may take the author herself of this dread crime. Here, here, my brave band of warriors, bring weapons, raze this house to the very ground.

MEDEA

[Appearing on the house-top.]

Now, now have I regained my regal state, my brother, my sire; and the Colchians have once more the spoil of the golden fleece; restored is my kingdom, my ravished virginity is restored. Oh, divinities, at last propitious, oh, festal day, oh, nuptial day! On! the crime is accomplished; but vengeance is not yet
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

vindicta nondum; perage, dum faciunt manus. quid nunc moraris, anime? quid dubitas potens? iam cecidit ira. paenitet facti, pudet. quid, misera, feci? misera? paeniteat licet, feci. voluptas magna me invitam subit, et ecce crescit. derat hoc unum mihi, spectator iste. nil adhuc facti reor; quidquid sine isto fecinus sceleris perit.

IASON

En ipsa tecti parte praecepioti imminet. hue rapiat ignes aliquis, ut flammis cadat suis perusta.

MEDEA

Congere extremum tuis natis, Iason, funus, ac tumulum strue; coniunx socerque iusta iam functis habent, a me sepulti; natus hic fatum tulit, hic te vidente dabitur exitio pari.

IASON

Per numen omne perque communes fugas torosque, quos non nostra violavit fides, iam parce nato. si quod est crimen, meum est; me dedo morti; noxium macta caput.

MEDEA

Hac qua recusas, qua doles, ferrum exigam. i nunc, superbe, virginum thalamos pete, relinque matres.
MEDEA

complete; be done with it while thy hands are still about it. Why dost thou delay now, O soul? Why hesitate, though thou canst do it? Now has my wrath died within me. I am sorry for my act, ashamed. What, wretched woman, have I done?—wretched, say I? Though I repent, yet have I done it! Great joy steals on me 'gainst my will, and lo, it is increasing. [She catches sight of Jason in the crowd below.] This one thing I lacked, that yon man should behold. Naught have I done as yet; whatever crime I've done is lost unless he see it.

JASON [discovering her]

See, there she is herself, leaning over the sheer battlement! Someone bring fire that she may fall consumed by her own flames.

MEDEA

Nay, Jason, heap up for thy sons their last funeral pyre; build them a tomb. Thy wife and father have already the services due the dead, buried by me; this son has met his doom, and this shall suffer like fate before thy eyes.

JASON

By all the gods, by our flight together, by our marriage couch, to which I have not been faithless, spare the boy. If there is any guilt, 'tis mine. I give myself up to death; destroy my guilty head.

MEDEA

Here\(^1\) where thou dost forbid it, where it will grieve thee, will I plunge the sword. Go now, haughty man, take thee maids for wives, abandon mothers.

\(^1\) In the body of the living son.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

IASON

Vnus est poenae satis

MEDEA

Si posset una caede satiari haec manus, nullam petisset. ut duos perimam, tamen nimium est dolori numeros angustus meo. in matre si quod pignus etiamnunc latet, scrutabor ense viscera et ferro extraham.¹

IASON

Iam perage coeptum facinus—haut ultra precor, moramque saltem supplicis dona meis.

MEDEA

Perfruere lento scelere, ne propera, dolor:
meus dies est; tempore accepto utimur.

IASON

Infesta, memet perime.

MEDEA

Misereri iubes—
bene est, peractum est. plura non habui, dolor,
qua tibi litarem. lumina hue tumida alleva, ¹020
ingrate Iason. coniugem agnoscis tuam?
sic fugere soleo. patuit in caelum via:
squamosa gemini colla serpentes inuo

¹ Leo deletes these two lines.
MEDEA

JASON

One is enough for punishment.

MEDEA

If this hand could be satisfied with the death of one, it would have sought no death at all. Though I slay two, still is the count too small to appease my grief. If in my womb there still lurk any pledge of thee, I'll search my very vitals with the sword and hale it forth.

JASON

Now end what thou hast begun—I make no more entreaty—and at least spare my sufferings this suspense.

MEDEA

Enjoy a slow revenge, hasten not, my grief; mine is the day; we are but using the allotted time.

JASON

O heartless one, slay me.

MEDEA

Thou biddst me pity—[She slays the second son.] 'Tis well, 'tis done. I had no more atonement to offer thee, O grief. Lift thy tear-swollen eyes hither, ungrateful Jason. Dost recognize thy wife? 'Tis thus I am wont to flee. A way through the air has opened for me; two serpents offer their scaly

1 Translating dona in the sense of remitte.
2 i.e. Creon had granted Medea this whole day for her own in Corinth.
3 By means of a dragon-drawn car which now appears in the air.
SENCAE TRAGOEDIAE

summissa praebent. recipe iam natos, parens; ego inter auras aliti curru vehar.

IASON

Per alta vade spatia sublimi aethere; testare nullos esse, qua veheris, deos.
mecks bending to the yoke. Now, father, take back thy sons. [She throws the bodies down to him.] I through the air on my winged car shall ride.

[She mounts the car and is borne away.]

JASON [calling after her]

Go on through the lofty spaces of high heaven and bear witness, where thou ridest, that there are no gods.
DRAMATIS PERSONAE

Hippolytus, son of Theseus and Antiope, an Amazon.
Phaedra, wife of Theseus and stepmother of Hippolytus.
Theseus, king of Athens.
Nurse of Phaedra.
Messenger
Slaves and Attendants.
Chorus of Athenian citizens.

The Scene is laid throughout in the court in front of the royal palace at Athens, and the action is confined to the space of one day.
ARGUMENT

Theseus had wed Antiope, the Amazon, and of their union had been born Hippolytus. This youth grew up to love the chase, austere and beautiful, shunning the haunts of men and scorning the love of women. Theseus had meanwhile slain Antiope, and married Phaedra, Cretan Minos' child.

And now, for four years past, the king has not been seen upon the earth, for, following the mad adventure of his bosom friend, Pirithoüs, he has descended into Tartarus to help him steal away its queen, and thence, men think, he never will return.

Deserted by her lord, the hapless Phaedra has conceived a hopeless passion for Hippolytus; for Venus, mindful of her old amour with Mars, which Phaedra's ancestor, Apollo, had exposed, has sent this madness on her, even as Pasiphaë, her mother, had been cursed with a most mad and fatal malady.
HIPPOLYTVS, OR PHAEDRA

HIPPOLYTVS

Ite, umbrosas cingite silvas
summaque montis iuga, Cecropii!
celeri planta lustrate vagi
quae saxosae loca Parnetho
subiecta iacent, quae Thriasii vallibus amnis rapida currens verberat unda, scandite colles
semper canos nive Rhipaea;
hac, hac alii qua nemus alta
texitur alno, qua prata iacent
quae rorifera mulcens aura Zephyrus vernas evocat herbas,
ubi per graciles levis Ilisos
labitur agros piger et steriles
amne maligno radit harenas.

Vos qua Marathon tramite laevo saltus aperit, qua comitatae gregibus parvis nocturna petunt pabula fetae; vos qua tepidis subditus austris frigora mollit durus Acharneus.

Alius rupem dulcis Hymetti, parvas alius calcet Aphidnas;
pars illa diu vacat immunis,

1 Leo deletes l. 14: ubi Maeander super inaequales.
HIPPOLYTUS, OR PHAEDRA

HIPPOLYTUS

[In the early morning, in the palace court at Athens. Enter HIPPOLYTUS with a large company of huntsmen armed with the various weapons of the hunt, and leading numerous dogs in leash. HIPPOLYTUS proceeds to assign the various tasks of the day to his followers.]

Go, girdle the shadowy woods and the topmost ridges of the mount, ye sons of Cecrops! With nimble feet wide wandering, scour the coverts that lie 'neath rocky Parnes and in the vale of Thria, whose swift-flowing stream lashes its banks; climb the hills ever white with Rhipean snow. Here, here let others hie, where the tall alder-thickets fringe the grove, where meadows lie which Zephyr soothes with his dew-laden breath and calls forth the herbage of the spring, where scant Ilissos flows sluggishly along through meagre fields, and with ungenerous stream creeps o'er unfruitful sands.

17 Go ye by the left path where Marathon opens out her forest glades, where with their small following the suckling mothers seek nightly forage; and ye, where rugged Acharneus tempers his frosts beneath the warm south-wind.

23 Let one tread sweet Hymettus' cliff, another, small Aphidnae; too long unharried is that spot

1 x 321
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

qua curvati litora ponti Sunion urget. si quem tangit gloria silvae, vocat hunc Phlye 1
hic versatur, metus agricoli,
vulnere multo iam notus aper.

At vos laxas canibus tacitis mittite habenas; teneant acres lora Molossos et pugnaces tendant Cretes fortia trito vincula collo.

at Spartanos (genus est audax avidumque ferae) nodo cautos propriore liga. veniet tempus,
cum latratu cava saxa sonent;
nunc demissi nare sagaci
captent auras lustraque presso
quae rostant rostro, dum lux dubia est, dum signa pedum roscida tellus
impressa tenet.

Alius raras cervice gravi
portare plagas, alius teretes properet laqueos. picta rubenti linea pinna vano cludat
terrore feras.
tibi vibretur missile telum, tu grave dextra laevaque simul
robur lato dirige ferro,
tu praecipites clamore feras
subsessor ages; tu iam victor curvo solves viscera cultro.

Ades en comiti, diva virago,
cuius regno pars terrarum
secretas vacat, cuius certis
petitur telis fera quae gelidum

1 So Leo: Flius MSS.
where Sunium thrusts out the shores of the curving sea. If any feels the lure of the forest, Phlye calls for him; there is the haunt of the boar, terror of husbandmen, famed by now for many a wound.

31 But do you cast off the leashes from the dogs that hunt in silence; still let thongs hold the keen Molossians fast, and let the savage Cretans tug on the stout bonds with well-worn necks. But the Spartans (for their breed is bold and eager for the prey) hold in carefully with a tighter knot. The time will come when the hollow rocks will re-echo with their bayings; now, with heads low-hung, let them snuff the air with keen nostrils, and with muzzles to earth quest through the forest haunts, while the light is still dim, while the dewy ground still retains the well-marked trail.

44 Let some of you make speed to load your necks with the heavy, wide-meshed nets, and others with the smooth-wrought snares. Let a line decked out with crimson feathers hedge the deer with empty terror. Thou shalt brandish the dart, thou with right and left hand together hurl the heavy oak-shaft with broad iron head; do thou lie in hiding and with shouts drive the game on in headlong rush; and thou, when victory is won, shalt free flesh from hide with thy curved hunting-knife.

54 And do thou be with thy follower, O manlike goddess,¹ for whose sovereignty earth’s secret places are reserved, whose darts with unerring aim seek

¹ Diana.
SENECAE TRAGEODIAE

potat Araxen et quae stanti
ludit in Histro. tua Gaetulos dextra leones, tua Cretacae sequitur cervas; nunc veloce
figis dammas leviore manu.
tibi dant variae pectora tigres,
tibi villosi terga bisontes
latisque feri cornibus uri.
quidquid solis pascitur arvis,
sive illud Arabs divite silva
sive illud inops novit Garamans vaciaisque vagus Sarmata campis,¹ sive ferocis iuga Pyrenes
sive Hyrcani celant saltus, arcus metuit, Diana, tuos.
tua si gratus numina cultor
tulit in saltus, retia vinctas tenuere feras, nulli laqueum
rupere pedes; fertur planstro
praeda gementi; tum rostra canes sanguine multo rubicunda gerunt repetitque casas rustica longo turba triumpho.

En, diva, faves: signum arguti
misere canes, vocor in silvas.
hae, haec pergat qua via longum
compensat iter.

PHAEDRA

O magna vasti Creta dominatrix freti, cuius per omne litus innumerae rates tenuere pontum,² quidquid Assyria tenus
tellure Nereus pervius rostris secat,

¹ Leo transposes l. 71 to follow l. 68.
² Leo conjectures portus.
out the prey which drinks of the cool Araxes or sports on Ister's frozen streams. Thy hand aims at Gaetulian lions, thine at Cretan deer; and now with lighter stroke dost thou pierce swift-fleeing does. The striped tigers face thee, but the shaggy-backed bisons flee, and the wild ox with wide-spreading horns. All things that feed in the lonely fields, whether the Arabian knows them in his rich forests, or the needy Garamantian and the wandering Sarmatian on his desert plains, whatever the heights of the rough Pyrenees or the Hyrcanian glades conceal, all fear thy bow, Diana. If, his offerings paid, thy worshipper takes thy favour with him to the glades, his nets hold the tangled prey, no feet break through his snares; his game is brought in on groaning wains, his hounds have their muzzles red with blood, and all the rustic throng come home in long triumphant line.

Lo, goddess, thou dost hear me: the shrill-tongued hounds have given the sign. I am summoned to the woods. Here, here I'll hasten by the shortest way. [Exeunt.

[Enter Phaedra from the palace.]

PHAE德拉

O mighty Crete, the vast sea's mistress, whose countless vessels along every coast have held the deep, yea, whatever lands, e'en to Assyria, making
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

cur me in penates obsidem invisos datam hostique nuptam degere aetatem in malis lacrimisque cogis? profugus en coniunx abest praestatque nuptae quam solet Theseus fidem. fortis per altas invii retro lacus vadit tenebras miles audacis proci, solio ut revulsam regis inferni abstrahat; pergit furoris socius, haud illum timor pudorique tenuit—stupra et illicitos toros Acheron te in imo qu aerit Hippolyti pater.

Sed maior alius incubat maestae dolor.
non me quies nocturna, non altus sopor solvere curis. alitur et crescit malum et ardet intus qualis Aetnaeo vapor exunctat antro. Palladis telae vacant et inter ipsas pensa labuntur manus; non colere donis templ a votivis libet, non inter aras, Atthidum mixtam choris, iactare tacitis conscias sacris faces, nec adire castis precibus aut ritu pio adiudicatae praesidem terrae deam: iuvat excitatas consequi cursu feras et rigida molli gaesa iaculari manu.

Quo tendis, anime? quid furens saltus amas? fatale miserae matris agnosco malum; peccare noster novit in silvis amor. genetrix, tui me miseret; infando malo
HIPPOLYTUS

a path for the prows of ships, old Nereus cleaves—why dost thou force me here, given o'er to an enemy's house as hostage, wife to my foe, to spend my days in wretchedness and weeping? Behold, fled is my lord afar and keeps his bridal oath as is the wont of Theseus. Through the deep shades of the pool which none recrosses is he faring, this brave recruit of a madcap suitor, that from the very throne of the infernal king he may rob and bear away his wife. He hurries on, a partner in mad folly; him nor fear nor shame held back. And there in the depths of Acheron he seeks adultery and an unlawful bed, this father of Hippolytus.

But another, greater smart burdens my woeful breast. No rest by night, no deep slumber frees me from care. A malady feeds and grows within my heart, and it burns there hot as the steam that wells from Aetna's caverns. Pallas' loom stands idle and my task slips from my listless hands; no longer it pleases me to deck the temples with votive offerings, nor at the altars, midst bands of Athenian dames, to wave torches in witness of the silent rites, nor with pure prayers and pious worship to approach the goddess who guards the land once granted to her! My joy is to follow in pursuit of the startled beasts and with soft hand to hurl stiff javelins.

Whither, my soul, art tending? Why this mad love of forest glades? I recognize my wretched mother's fatal curse; her love and mine know how to sin in forest depths. Mother, my heart aches for 1 Pirithoús.

2 From being merely the assistant of another in an unlawful deed, Theseus is here conceived as the principal in it.
3 Pallas, patroness of Athens by the assignment of the gods.
4 See Index s.v. "Pasiphaë."
correpta pecoris efferum saevi ducem audax amasti; torvus, impatiens iugi adulter ille, ductor indomiti gregis—sed amabat aliquid. quis meas miserae deus aut quis iuvare Daedalus flammam queat?
non si ipse remeet, arte Mopsopia potens
qui nostra caeca monstra conclusit domo, promittat ullah casibus nostris opem.
stirpem perosa Solis invis Venus per nos catenas vindicat Martis sui suasque, probris omne Phoebeum genus onerat nefandis. nulla Minois lev defuncta amore est, iungitur semper nefas.

NVTRIX

Thesea coniunx, clara progenies Iovis, nefanda casto pectore exturba ocius,
extingue flammam neve te dirae spei
praebet ob-equentem. quisquis in primo obstitit pepulitque amorem, tutus ac victor fuit;
quii blandiendo dulce nutrivit malum,
sero recusat ferre quod subiit ingum.

Nec me fugit, quam durus et ver insolens
ad recta flecti regius nolit tumor.
quemcumque dederit exitum casus feram;
fortem facit vicina libertas senem.

Honesta primum est velle nec labi via,
pudor est secundus nosse peccandi modum.
quo, misera, pergis? quid domum infamem aggravas
superasque matrem? maius est monstro nefas;
HIPPOLYTUS

thee; swept away by ill unspeakable, thou didst boldly love the wild leader of the savage herd. Fierce was he and impatient of the yoke, lawless in love, leader of an untamed herd; yet he did love something. But as for me, what god, what Daedalus could ease my wretched passion? Though he himself should return, mighty in Attic cunning, who shut our monster in the dark labyrinth, he could afford no help to my calamity. Venus, detesting the offspring of the hated Sun, is avenging through us the chains that bound her to her loved Mars, and loads the whole race of Phoebus with shame unspeakable. No daughter of Minos' house hath found love's bondage light; ever 'tis linked with guilt.

NURSE

O wife of Theseus, illustrious child of Jove, quickly drive guilty thoughts from thy pure breast, put out these fires, nor show thyself obedient to this dread hope of love. Whoever at the outset has resisted and routed love, has been safe and conqueror; but whoso by dalliance has fed the sweet torment, too late refuses to bear the accepted yoke.

I know how the stubborn pride of princes, ill brooking truth, refuses to be bent to righteousness; but whatever outcome fate shall give I am ready to endure; freedom near at hand makes the aged brave.

Best is the upright purpose and the unswerving path; next is the shame, that knows some measure in transgressing. To what end art thou hasting, wretched woman? Why heap fresh infamy upon thy house and outsin thy mother? Impious sin is

1 Daedalus.
2 See Index s.v. "Mars" and "Venus."
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

nam monstra fato, moribus scelera imputes.
si, quod maritus supera non cernit loca,
tutum esse facinus credis et vacuum metu,
erras; teneri crede Lethaeo abditum Thesea profundo et ferre perpetuam Styga;
quad ille, lato maria qui regno premit
populisque reddit iura centenis, pater?
latera tantum facinus occultum sitet?
sagax parentum est cura. credamus tamen
astu doloque tegere nos tantum nefas;
quad ille rebus lumen infundens suum
matris parens? quad ille qui mundum quatit vibrans corusca fulmen Aetnaeum manu,
sator deorum? credis hoc posse effici,
inter videntes omnia ut lateas avos?

Sed ut secundus numinum abscondat favor goitus nefandos utque contingat stupro negata magnis sceleribus semper fides;
quad poena praesens conscientis mentis pavor
animusque culpa plenus et semet timens?
sceles aliqua tutum, nulla securum tulit.
compesce amoris impii flammas, precor,
nefasque quod non ualla tellus barbar
commisit umquam, non vagi campis Getae nec inhospitalis Taurus aut sparsus Scythes;
expelle facinus mente castifica horridum
memorique matris metue concubitus novos.
miscere thalamos patris et nati apparas
uteroque prolem capere confusam impio?
worse than monstrous passion; for monstrous love thou mayst impute to fate, but crime, to character. If, because thy husband sees not the realms of earth, thou dost believe thy guilt safe and devoid of fear, thou errest. Suppose that Theseus is indeed held fast, hidden away in Lethean depths, and must suffer the Styx eternally; what of him, thy father, who holds the seas under his wide dominion and gives laws to a hundred people? Will he permit so great a crime to lie concealed? Shrewd is the care of fathers. Yet suppose that by craft and guile we do hide this great wickedness from him; what of him who sheds his light on all things, thy mother's sire? What of him who makes the heavens rock, brandishing Aetnean bolts in his glittering hand, the father of the gods? Dost believe thou canst so sin as to escape the all-seeing eyes of both thy grandsires?

But grant that heaven's kindly grace conceals this impious intercourse; grant that to incest be shown the loyalty which great crimes never find; what of the ever-present penalty, the soul's conscious dread, and the heart filled with crime and fearful of itself? Some women have sinned with safety, but none with peace of soul. Then quench the fires of impious love, I pray, and shun a deed which no barbaric land has ever done, neither the Getae, wandering on their plains, nor the inhospitable Taurians, nor scattered Scythians. Drive this hideous purpose from thy chaste mind, and, remembering thy mother, shun strange matings. Dost purpose to share thy bed with father and with son, and receive in an incestuous womb a blended progeny?

1 The "hundred cities" of Crete.
2 The Sun.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

perge et nefandis verte naturam ignibus—
cur monstra cessant? aula cur fratris vacat?
prodigia totiens orbis insueta audiet,
natura totiens legibus cedet suis,
quotiens amabit Cressa?

PHAEDRA

Quae memoras scio
vera esse, nutrix; sed furor cogit sequi peiora. vadit animus in praceps sciens remeatque frustra sana consilia appetens. 180
sic eum gravatam navita adversa ratem propellit unda, cedit in vanum labor et victa prono puppis aufertur vado.
quid ratio possit? vicit ac regnat furor
potensque tota mente dominatur deus.
hic volucrer omni pollet in terra impotens
laesumque flammis torret indomitis Iovem; Gradivus istas belliger sensit faces,
opifex trisulci fulminis sensit deus,
et qui furentes semper Aetnaeis ingis
versat caminos igne tam parvo calet;
ipsumque Phoebum, tela qui nervo regit,
figit sagitta certior missa puer
volitatque caelo pariter et terris gravis.

NVTRIX

Deum esse amorem turpis et vitio furens
finxit libido, quoque liberior foret

332
HIPPOLYTUS

Then go thou on and overturn all nature with thy unhallowed fires. Why do monsters cease? Why does thy brother's labyrinth stand empty? Shall the world hear of strange prodigies, shall nature's laws give way, whenever a Cretan woman loves?

PHAEDRA

I know, nurse, that what thou sayest is true; but passion forces me to take the worser path. With full knowledge my soul moves on to the abyss and vainly seeks the backward way in quest of counsels sane. Even so, when the mariner urges his laden vessel against opposing seas, his toil goes for naught and the ship, vanquished, is swept away by the swift-moving tide. What can reason do? Passion has conquered and now rules supreme, and, a mighty god, lords it o'er all my soul. This winged god rules ruthlessly throughout the earth and inflames Jove himself, wounded with unquenched fires. Gradivus, the warrior god, has felt those flames; that god has felt them who fashions the three-forked thunderbolts, yea, he who tends the hot furnaces ever raging 'neath Aetna's peaks is inflamed by so small a fire as this. Nay, Phoebus himself, who guides with sure aim his arrows from the bow-string, a boy of more sure aim pierces with his flying shaft, and flits about, baneful alike to heaven and to earth.

NURSE

'Tis base and sin-mad lust that has made love into a god and, to enjoy more liberty, has given to

1 i.e. Why are no more monsters like the Minotaur produced?
2 The Minotaur.
3 Vulcan.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

titulum furori numinis falsi addidit. natum per omnes scilicet terras vagum Erycina mittit, ille per caelum volans proterva tenera tela molitur manu regnumque tantum minimus e superis habet!
vana ista demens animus ascivit sibi Venerisque numen finxit atque arcus dei.
quisquis secundis rebus exultat nimis
fluitque luxu, semper insolita appetit.
tunc illa magna dirigat fortunae comes subit libido; non placent suetac dapes,
non tecta sani moris aut vilis scyphus.
cur in penates rarius tenues subit
haec delicatas eligens pestis domos?
cur sancta parvis habitat in tectis Venus mediumque sanos vulgus affectus tenet et se coercent modica? contra divites regnoque fulti plura quam fas est petunt?
quod non potest vult posse qui nimium potest.
quid decet alto praeditam solio vides;
metue ac verere sceptrum remeantis viri.

PHAEDRA

Amoris in me maximum regnum puto
reditusque nullos metuo. non umquam amplius convexa tetigit supera qui mersus semel
aditi silentem nocte perpetua domum.

NVTRIX

Ne crede Diti. clauerit regnum licet canisque diras Stygius observet fores, solus negatas invenit Theseus vias.
passion the title of an unreal divinity. The goddess of Eryx sends her son, forsooth, wandering through all lands, and he, flying through heaven's void, wields wanton weapons in his boyish hands, and, though least of gods, still holds such mighty empire! 'Tis love-mad souls that have adopted these vain conceits and have feigned Venus' divinity and a god's archery. Whoever rejoices in overmuch prosperity and abounds in luxury is ever seeking unaccustomed joys. Then that dire comrade of high estate, inordinate desire, steals in; wonted feasts no longer please, nor houses of simple fashion or modest cups. Why steals this deadly pest more rarely into humble homes, choosing rather the homes of daintiness? Why doth hallowed love dwell 'neath lowly roofs and the general throng have wholesome impulses? Why hath modest fortune self-control? Why, on the other hand, do rich men, propped on empire, ever grasp at more than heaven allows? He who is too powerful seeks power beyond his power. What becomes one endowed with high estate, thou knowest well; then fear and respect the sceptre of thy returning lord.

Phaedra

Love's is, I think, the mightiest sovereignty over me, and I fear no lord's return. Nevermore has he reached sight of the vaulted skies who, once plunged in perpetual night, has gone to the silent home.

Nurse

Trust not in Dis. Though he bar his realm, and though the Stygian dog keep guard o'er the grim doors, Theseus alone finds out forbidden ways.

1 Venus
VENIAM ille amori forsitan nostro dabit.

NVTRIX

Immitis etiam coniugi castae fuit; experta saevam est barbara Antiope manum. sed posse flecti coniugem iratum puta; quis huius animum flectet intractabilem? exosus omne feminae nomen fugit, immittis annos caelibu vitae dicat, conubia vitat. genus Amazonium scias.

PHAEDRA

Hunc in nivosi collis haerentem ingis, et aspera agili saxa calcantem pede sequi per alta nemora, per montes placet.

NVTRIX

Resistet ille seque mulcendum dabit castosque ritus Venere non casta exuet? tibi ponet odium, cuius odio forsitan persequitur omnes? precibus haud viuci potest.

PHAEDRA

Ferus est; amore didicimus vinci feros.

NVTRIX

Fugiet.

PHAEDRA

Per ipsa maria si fugiet, sequar.
HIPPOLYTUS

PHAEDRA
He will give indulgence to my love, perchance.

NURSE
Harsh was he even to a virtuous wife; foreign Antiope found his hand severe. But suppose thou canst bend thy angry husband; who can bend this youth’s stubborn soul? Hating the very name of woman, he flees them all, sternly devotes his years to single life and shuns the marriage tie. Thou wouldst know him of Amazonian breed.

PHAEDRA
Though he keep him to the peaks of snowy hills, though he course swiftly ’mongst the ragged rocks, still through the deep forests, over the mountains, ’tis my resolve to follow him.

NURSE
Will he stop for thee and yield himself to thy caresses? Will he lay aside his pure practices for impure love? Will he give up his hate for thee, when ’tis for hate of thee, perchance, he repels all women? By no prayers can he be overcome.

PHAEDRA
Wild is he; but wild things, we have learned, can be o’ercome by love.

NURSE
He will flee away.

PHAEDRA
Though he flee through the very seas, still will I follow.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

NVTRIX

Patris memento.

PHAEDRA

Meminimum matris simul

NVTRIX

Genus omne profugit.

PHAEDRA

Paelicis careo metu

NVTRIX

Aderit maritus.

PHAEDRA

Nempe Pirithoi\(^1\) comes?

NVTRIX

Aderitque genitor.

PHAEDRA

Mitis, Ariadnae pater.

NVTRIX

Per has senectae splendidas supplex comas fessumque curis pectus et cara ubera precor, furorem siste teque ipsa adiueva. pars sanitatis velle sanari fuit.

\(^1\) So A: Leo Perithoi.
HIPPOLYTUS

NURSE

Remember thy father.

PHAEDRA

My mother I remember too.

NURSE

He shuns the whole race of women.

PHAEDRA

Then need I fear no rival.

NURSE

Thy husband will be here.

PHAEDRA

Yes, comrade of Pirithoüs!

NURSE

And thy father will be here.

PHAEDRA

He will be kind, Ariadne's father.

NURSE

By these gleaming locks of age, by this heart, worn with care, by these dear breasts, I beg thee check this mad love and come to thy own relief. The wish for healing has ever been the half of health.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

PHAEDRA

Non omnis animo cessit ingenuo pudor. paremus, altrix. qui regi non vult amor vineatur. hand te, fama, maculari sinam. haec sola ratio est, unicum effugium mali: virum sequamur; morte praevertam nefas.

NVTRIX

Moderare, alumna, mentis effrenae impetus, animos coerce. dignam ob hoc vita reor quod esse temet autemas dignam nece.

PHAEDRA

Decreta mors est; quaeeritur fati genus. laqueone vitam finiam an ferro inceubem? an missa praeceps arce Palladia cadam?

NVTRIX

Sic te senectus nostra praeceipiti sinat perire leto? siste furibundum impetum, haud quisquam ad vitam facile revocari potest.\footnote{Leo deletes this line.}

PHAEDRA

Prohibere nulla ratio periturum potest ubi qui mori constituit et debet mori. proin castitatis vindicem armemus manum.

NVTRIX

Solamen annis unicum fessis, era, si tam protervus incubat menti furor, contemne famam: fama vix vero favet,
HIPPOLYTUS

PHAEDRA

Not wholly has shame fled from my noble soul. I yield, dear nurse. Let the love which will not be controlled be overcome. Fair fame, I will not suffer thee to be defiled. This is the only way, the one sole escape from evil: let me follow my husband; by death will I forestall my sin.

NURSE

Check, O my child, the rush of thine unbridled spirit; control thy passion. For this cause do I deem thee worthy life, since thou declardest thyself worthy death.

PHAEDRA

I am resolved on death; I seek but the manner of my fate. With the noose shall I end my life, or fall upon the sword? or shall I leap headlong from Pallas' citadel?

NURSE

Can my old age permit thee thus to go headlong to thy death? Resist this mad impulse. No one can easily be recalled to life.

PHAEDRA

No argument can stay from perishing one who has resolved to die and ought to die. Wherefore in protection of my honour let me arm my hand.

NURSE

O mistress, sole comfort of my weary years, if so unruly a passion weighs on thy soul, scorn thou this fame; scarcely doth fame favour truth, being
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

peius merenti melior et peior bono. 270
temptemus animum tristem et intractabilem.
meus iste labor est aggredi iuvenem ferum
mentemque saevam flectere inimitis viri.

CHORVS

Diva non miti generata ponto,
quam vocat matrem geminus Cupido,
impotens flammis simul et sagittis,
iste lascivus puer et renidens
tela quam certo moderatur arcu!
labitur totas furor in medullas
igne furtivo populante venas."
non habet latam data plaga frontem,
sed vorat tectas penitus medullas.
nulla pax isti puero: per orbem
spargit effusas agilis sagittas;
quaeque nascentem videt ora solem,
quaeque ad Hesperias iacet ora metas,
si qua ferventi subiecta cancro,
si qua Parrhasiae glacialis ursae semper errantes patitur colonos,
no vit hos aestus. iuvenum feroce

concitat flammas senibusque fessis rursus extinctos revocat calores, virginum ignoto ferit igne pectus et iubet caelo superos relict
vultibus falsis habitare terras.
Thessali Phoebus pecoris magister
egit armentum positoque plectro
impari tauros calamo vocavit.
induit formas quotiens minores
ipse qui caelum nebulaeque fecit:
candidas ales modo movit alas,

1 Leo deletes il. 279, 280.
better to the worse deserving, worse to the good. Let us test that grim and stubborn soul. Mine is the task to approach the savage youth and bend the cruel man's relentless will.

[Exeunt into the palace.]

CHORUS

Thou goddess, born of the cruel sea, who art called the mother of both Loves,¹ that wanton, smiling boy of thine, reckless alike with torches and with arrows, with how sure bow doth he aim his shafts! His madness steals to the inmost marrow, while with creeping fire he ravages the veins. The wound he deals has no broad front, but it eats its way deep into the hidden marrow. There is no peace with that boy of thine; throughout the world nimbly he scatters his flying shafts. The shore that beholds the new-born sun and the shore that lies at his far western goal, the land lying beneath the burning Crab and the cold region of the Arcadian Bear, which sustains its ever-wandering husbandmen, all know these fires of his. He kindles the fierce flames of youth and in worn-out age he wakes again the extinguished fires; he smites maids' breasts with unknown heat, and bids the very gods leave heaven and dwell on earth in borrowed forms.

²⁹⁶ Phoebus as keeper of the Thessalian herd ² drove his cattle along and, laying quill aside, called together his bulls on the unequal reeds. How often did he put on lower forms, even he ³ who made heaven and the clouds: now as a bird he fluttered his white wings

¹ Ἐρώς and Ἀφρέως.
² Phoebus kept the herds of King Admetus for a year.
³ Jupiter, who came to Leda in the form of a swan.
dulcior vocem moriente cygno;
fronte nunc torva petulans iuvencus
virginum stravit sua terga ludo, perque fraternos nova regna fluctus
ungula lentus imitante remos
pectore adverso domuit profundum,
pro sua vector timidus rapina.
arsit obscuri dea clara mundi
nocte deserta nitidosque fratri
tradidit currus aliter regendos.
ille nocturnas agitare bigas
discit et gyro breviore flecti, dum tremunt axes graviore curru; 1
nec suum tempus tenuere noctes
et dies tardo remeavit ortu.
natus Alcmena posuit pharestras
et minax vasti spolium leonis, passus aptari digitis zmaragdos
et dari legem rudibus capillis;
crura distincto religavit auro,
lueteo plantas cohibente socco;
et manu, clavam modo qua gerbat,
fila deduxit properante fuso.

Vidit Persis ditique ferax
Lydia regno diceta feri
terga leonis
umerisque, quibus sedcrat alti regia caeli, tenuem Tyrio stamine pallam.
sacer est ignis (credite laesis)
nimiumque potens. qua terra salo eingitur alto quaque per ipsum candida mundum sidera currunt,
haec regna tenet puer immitis,

1 Leo has set this line after 313.
with note sweeter than the dying swan; now with savage front as a wanton bull he lowered his back for the sport of maidens and through the strange kingdom of his brother’s waves, using his hoofs in place of pliant oars, he breasted the deep sea and overcame it, a ferryman trembling for the prize he bore. The radiant goddess of the darksome sky burned with love and, forsaking the night, gave her gleaming chariot to her brother to guide in fashion other than his own. He learned to drive the team of night and to wheel in narrower circuit, while the axle groaned beneath the car’s heavier weight; nor did the nights keep their accustomed length, and with belated dawning came the day. The son of Alcmena laid by his quiver and the threatening skin of the huge lion, letting emeralds be fitted to his fingers and law be enforced on his rough locks; he bound his legs with cross-garterings of gold and within yellow sandals confined his feet; and in that hand, with which he but now bore the club, he spun out threads with flying spindle.

Persia and the rich, fertile realm of Lydia saw the fierce lion’s skin laid aside, and on those shoulders, on which the royal structure of the lofty sky had rested, a gauzy cloak of Tyrian web. ’Tis an accursed fire (believe those who have suffered) and all too powerful. Where the land is encircled by the briny deep, where the bright stars course through heaven itself, over these realms the pitiless boy holds sovereignty, whose shafts are felt in the lowest

1 Europa, whom the god, in bull-form, carried over the sea to Crete.
2 Diana, or Luna, the moon-goddess, who was in love with the shepherd, Endymion.
3 Hercules, smitten with love for Omphale, the Lydian queen.
spicula cuius sentit in imis ciaerulus undis grex ¹ Nereidum flammamque nequit relevere mari.
ignes sentit genus aligerum.
Venere instinctus suscipit audax
grege pro toto bella iuveneus;
si coniugio timuere suo,
postcunt timidi proelia cervi.
tune virgatas India tigres
decolor horret; tune vulnificos acuit dentes aper et toto est
spumeus ore;
Poeni quatiunt colla leones
et mugitu dant concepti ²
signa furoris. cum movit Amor,
tum silva gemit murmure saevo.
amat insani belua ponti Lucaeque boves, vindicat omnem
sibi naturam; nihil immune est,
odiumque perit cum iussit Amor.
veteres cedunt ignibus irae—
quid plura canam? vincit saevas cura novercas.

Altrix, profare quid feras; quonam in loco est
regina? saevis ecquis est flammis modus?

NVTRIX

Spes nulla tantum posse leniri malum, finisque flammis nullus insanis erit.
torretur aestu tacito et inclusus quoque,
quamvis tegatur, proditur vultu furor;
erumpit oculis ignis et lassae genae

¹ So A: Leo pervius undis rex.
² Leo has transposed this line.
depths by the sea-blue throng of Nereids, nor can they ease their heat by ocean's waters. These fires the race of winged creatures feel. Goaded on by love, the bold bull undertakes battle for the whole herd; if they feel that their mates are in danger, timid stags challenge to war. At such a time swart India holds striped tigers in especial fear; at such a time the boar whets his death-dealing tusks and his jaws are covered all with foam; African lions toss their manes and by their roarings give token of their engendered passion. When Love has roused them, then the forest groans with their grim uproar. Love sways the monsters of the raging sea, sways Lucanian bulls,¹ claims as his own all nature; nothing is exempt, and hate perishes at the command of Love. Old grudges yield unto his fires. Why tell of more? Love's cares o'erwhelm harsh stepmothers.

[Enter nurse from the inner palace.]

Nurse, tell the news thou bearest. How stands it with the queen? Hath her fierce flame any bound?

NURSE

No hope is there that such suffering can be relieved, and no end will there be to her mad fires. She is parched by a silent fever, and e'en though 'tis hidden away, shut in her heart, her passion is betrayed in her face; fire darts from her eyes; again, her weary gaze shrinks from the light; nothing

¹ i.e. elephants, so called because Italy first saw elephants in Lucania, in the war with Pyrrhus.
lucem recusant, nil idem dubiae placet artusque varie iactat incertus dolor.
nunc ut soluto labitur moriens gradu et vix labante sustinet collo caput, nunc se quieti reddet et, somni immemor, noctem querelis ducit; attolli iubet iterumque poni corpus et solvi comas rursusque fingi; semper impatiens sui mutatur habitus. nulla iam Cereris subit cura aut salutis; vadit incerto pede, iam viribus defecta. non idem vigor, non ora tinguens nitida purpureus rubor; populatur artus cura, iam gressus tremunt tenerque nitidi corporis cecidit decor. et qui ferebant signa Phoebeae facis oculi nihil gentile nec patrium micant. lacrimae cadunt per ora et assiduo genae rore irrigantur, qualiter Tauri iugis tepido madescunt imbre percessae nives.
Sed en, patescunt regiae fastigia. reclinis ipsa sedis auratae toro solitos amictus mente non sana abnuit.

PHAEDRA

Removete, famulae, purpura atque auro inlitas vestes, procul sit muricis Tyrii rubor, quae fila ramis ultimi Seres legunt. brevis expeditos zona constringat sinus, cervix monili vacua, nec niveus lapis deducat aures, Indici donum maris; odore crinis sparsus Assyrio vacet. sic temere iactae colla perfundant comae

1 Leo deletes II. 377, 378
long pleases her unbalanced soul, and her limbs by ever-shifting pangs are tossed in changeful wise. Now with failing steps she sinks down as if dying, and can hardly hold up her head on her fainting neck; now she lies down to rest and, heedless of slumber, spends the night in lamentations; she bids them to lift her up and again to lay her down, to lose her hair and again to bind it up; her raiment, with itself dissatisfied, is ever changed. She has now no care for food or health. She walks with aimless feet, wasted now in strength. Her old-time sprightliness is gone, and the ruddy glow of health no longer shines on her bright face; care feeds upon her limbs, her steps totter and the tender grace of her once beautiful form is fallen away; her eyes, which once shone like Phoebus' torch, no longer gleam with their ancestral fire. Tears fall down her face and her cheeks are wet with constant drops, as when on the top of Taurus the snows melt away, pierced by a warm shower.

But see, the palace doors are opening, and she herself, lying on golden couch, all sick of soul, rejects her wonted garments.

PHAEDRA

Away, ye slaves, with robes bedecked with purple and with gold; away, scarlet of the Tyrian shell, the webs which the far-off Seres gather from the trees. Let a narrow girdle hold in my garments' unencumbering folds, let there be no necklace at my throat, let no snowy pearls, the gift of India's ocean, weigh down my ears, and let my hair hang loose, unscented by Assyrian nard. So, tossed at random,

A reference to silk and the culture of the silkworm by the Seres, supposed to be the Chinese.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

umerosque summos, cursibus motae citis
ventos sequantur. laeva se pharetrae dabit, hastile vibret dextra Thessalicum manus.\(^1\)
qualis relictis frigidi Ponti plagis
cigit catervas Atticum pulsans solum Tanaitis aut Maeotis et nodo comas coegit emisitque, lunata latus protecta pelta; talis in silvas ferar.

CHORVS

Sepone questus; non levat miserons dolor;
agreste placca virginis numen deac.

NVTRIX

Regina nemorum, sola quae montes colis et una solis montibus coleris dea, converte tristes ominum in melius minas.
o magna silvas inter et lucos dea
clarumque caeli sidus et noctis decus, cuius relucet mundus alterna vice,
Hecate triformis, en ades coeptis favens.
animum rigentem tristis Hippolyti doma;
det facilis aures. mitiga pectus ferum;
amare discat, mutuos ignes ferat.
innecte mentem; torvus aversus ferox
in iura Veneris redeat. hue vires tuas intende; sic te lucidi vultus ferant et nube rupta cornibus puris eas, sic te regentem frena nocturni aetheris
detrahere numquam Thessali cantus queant

\(^1\) Leo deleter: talis severi mater Hippolyti fuit.
HIPPOLYTUS

let my locks fall down upon my neck and shoulders and, moved by swift running, stream upon the wind. My left hand shall be busied with the quiver and my right wield a Thessalian spear. In such guise as the dweller by Tanaïs or Maeotis, leaving cold Pontus' tract behind, led her hordes, treading Athenian soil, and, binding her locks in a knot, let them flow free, her side protected by a crescent shield; so will I betake me to the woods.

CHORUS

Cease thy complainings; grieving helps not the wretched. Appease the rustic divinity of our virgin goddess.

NURSE

O queen of groves, thou who in solitude loveth thy mountain-haunts, and who upon the solitary mountains art alone held holy, change for the better these dark, ill-omened threats. O great goddess of the woods and groves, bright orb of heaven, glory of the night, by whose changing beams the universe shines clear, O three-formed Hecate, lo, thou art at hand, favouring our undertaking. Conquer the unbending soul of stern Hippolytus; may he, compliant, give ear unto our prayer. Soften his fierce heart; may he learn to love, may he feel answering flames. Ensnare his mind; grim, hostile, fierce, may he turn him back unto the fealty of love. To this end direct thy powers; so mayst thou wear a shining face and, the clouds all scattered, fare on with undimmed horns; so, when thou drivest thy car through the nightly skies, may no witcheries of Thessaly prevail

1 i.e. any woman of the race of Amazons.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

nullusque de te gloriam pastor ferat.
ades invocata, iam fave votis, dea.

Ipsum intuor solemne venerated sacrum
nullo latus comitante—quid dubitas? dedit tempus locumque casus; utendum artibus.
trepidamus? haud est facile mandatum seclus
audere, verum iussa qui regis timet, deponat omne et pellat ex animo decus;
malus est minister regii imperii pudor.

HIPPOLYTVS

Quid hue seniles fessa moliris gradus,
o fida nutrix, turbidam frontem gerens et maesta vultu? sospes est certe parens
sospesque Phaedra stirpis et geminae iugum?

NVTRIX

Metus remitte. prospero regnum in statu est
domusque florens sorte felici viget.
sed tu beatis mitior rebus veni;
namque anxiam me cura sollicitat tui,
quod te ipse poenis gravibus infestus domas.
quem fata cogunt, ille cum venia est miser;
at si quis ultras se malis offert volens seque ipse torquet, perdere est dignus bona quis nescit uti. potius annorum memor mentem relaxa; noctibus festis facem attolle, curas Bacchus exoneret graves.

352
HIPPOLYTUS

to drag thee down and may no shepherd ¹ make boast o'er thee. Be near, goddess, in answer to our call; hear now our prayers.

[HIPPOLYTUS is seen approaching.]

424 The man himself I see, coming to perform thy sacred rites, no comrade at his side. [To herself:] Why dost thou hesitate? Chance has given thee both time and place. Thou must employ thy arts. Why do I tremble? 'Tis no easy task to dare a crime hidden by another, but whoso fears a sovereign's behests must lay aside and banish from his heart all thought of honour; shame is but an ill servant of a sovereign's commands.

HIPPOLYTUS

Why dost hither wend wearily thy aged steps, O faithful nurse, with troubled brow and face depressed? Surely my sire is safe, Phaedra is safe, and their two sons?

NURSE

Banish thy fear. The realm is in prosperous state, thy house is strong, flourishing under the smile of Heaven. But in this happy lot do thou show thyself less harsh; for distress for thee harasses my anxious heart, seeing that thou in thine own despite dost break thyself with heavy penances. If fate compels, 'tis pardonable to be wretched; but whoso of his own accord surrenders himself to misery and causes his own torment, he deserves to lose the happiness he knows not how to use. Nay, remember thy youth and relax thy spirit; go out o'nights, raising the festal torch; let Bacchus unburden thy weighty cares.

¹ An allusion to Endymion.
Aetate fruere; mobili cursu fugit. nunc facile pectus, grata nunc iuveni Venus. exultet animus; cur toro viduo iaces? tristem iuventam solve; nunc luxus\(^1\) rape, effunde habenas, optimos vitae dies effluere prohibe. propria descripsit deus officia et aevum per suos duxit gradus; laetitia iuvenem, frons decet tristis senem. quid te coherces et necas rectam indolem? seges illa magnum fenus agricolae dabit quaeque cumque laetis tenera luxuriat satis, arborque celso vertice evincet nemus quam non maligna caedit aut resecat manus. ingenia melius recta se in laudes ferunt, si nobilem animum vegeta libertas alit. 450

Truculentus et silvester ac vitae inscius tristem iuventam Venere deserta coles? hoc esse munus credis indictum viris, ut dura tolerent, cursibus domitent equos et saeva bella Marte sanguineo gerant? quam varia leti genera mortalem trahunt carpuntque turbam, pontus et ferrum et doli! sed ista credas desse: sic atram Styga iam petimus ultro. caelibem vitam probet sterilis iuventus; hoc crit, quidquid vides, unius aevi turba et in semet ruet. 475

providit ille maximus mundi parens, cum tam rapaces cerneret Fati manus, ut damna semper subole repararet nova, excedat agedum rebus humanis Venus, quae supplet ac restituit exhaustum genus: orbis iacebit squalido turpis situ, vacuum sine ullis piscibus stabit mare 470

\(^1\) So A: Leo cursus.
Enjoy thy life; 'tis speeding swift away. Now hearts are light, now love to youth is pleasing. Let thy heart rejoice. Why dost lie on a lonely couch? Free thy youth from gloom; lay hold on pleasures; loosen the reins; let not life's best days escape thee. God has portioned out its proper duties to each time of life and led this span of ours through its own stages; joy befits the young, a serious face the old. Why dost hold thyself in check and strangle thy true nature? That crop will give to the farmer the best return which in the tender blade runs riot with joyous growth, and that tree with lofty head will overtop the grove which no grudging hand cuts down or prunes away. So will rightminds be reared unto a richer fruit of praise, if sprightly freedom nourish the high-born soul.

Wilt thou, as a harsh woods-dweller, ignorant of life, spend thy youth in gloom and let Venus be forgot? Is it man's allotted task, thinkst thou, to endure hardship, curb horses in their swift course, and wage savage wars in bloody battles? How various are the forms of death that seize and feed on mortal throngs! the sea, the steel and treachery! But suppose these lacking: by thy path we make wantonly for murky death. The unwedded life let barren youth applaud; then will all that thou beholdest be the throng of one generation only and will fall in ruins on itself. In his providence did yonder almighty father of the universe, when he saw how greedy were the hands of Fate, give heed ever by fresh progeny to make losses good. Come now, let love but be banished from human life, love, which supplies and renews the impoverished race: the whole globe will lie foul in vile neglect; the sea will stand empty of its fish; birds will be lacking to the heavens, wild beasts to the woods, and alesque caelo derit et silvis fera,
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

solis et aer pervius ventis erit.
proinde vitae sequere naturam ducem;
urbem frequenta, civium coetum cole.

HIPPOLYTVS

Non alia magis est libera et vitio carens
ritusque melius vita quae priscos colat,
quam quae relictis moenibus silvas amat.
non illum avarae mentis inflammat furor
qui se dicavit montium insontem iugis,
non aura populi et vulgus infidum bonis,
non pestilens invidia, non fragilis favor;
non ille regno servit aut regno imminens
vanos honores sequitur aut fluxas opes, spie metusque liber; haud illum niger
edaxque livor dente degeneri petit;
nec scelera populos inter atque urbes sata
novit nec omnes conscius strepitus pavet aut verba fingt; mille non quae rit dives columnis nec trabes multo insolens suffigit auro; non cruor largus pias inundat aras, fruge nec sparsi sacra centena nivei colla summittunt boves;
sed rure vacuo potitur et aperto aethere
innocuus errat.

Callidas tantum feris
struxisse fraudes novit et fessus gravi labore niveo corpus Iliso fovet.
nunc ille ripam celeris Alphei legit,
nunc nemoris alti densa metatur loca,
ubi Lerna puro gelida perlucet vado,
sedesque mutas; hinc aves querulae fremunt
ornique ventis lene percussae tremunt

356
HIPPOLYTUS

the paths of air will be traversed only by the winds. Follow, then, nature as life's guide; frequent the city; seek out the haunts of men.

HIPPOLYTUS

There is no life so free and innocent, none which better cherishes the ancient ways, than that which, forsaking cities, loves the woods. His heart is inflamed by no mad greed of gain who has devoted himself to harmless ranging on the mountain-tops; here is no shouting populace, no mob, faithless to good men, no poisonous hate, no brittle favour. No slave is he of kings, nor in quest of kingship does he chase empty honours or elusive wealth, free alike from hope and fear; him venomous spite assails not with the bite of base-born tooth; those crimes that spawn midst the city's teeming throngs he does not know, nor in guilty consciousness does he quake at every sound, or frame lying words. He seeks not in pride of wealth to be sheltered by a roof reared on a thousand pillars, nor in insolence plates he with much gold his rafter-beams. No streams of blood drench his pious altars, no hecatombs of snow-white bullocks, sprinkled with the sacred meal, bend low their necks; but his lordship is over the empty fields, and beneath the open sky he wanders blameless.

His only craft is to set cunning snares for the wild beasts, and, when weary with hard toil, he refreshes his body in Ilissos' stream, chilled by the snows. Now he fares along the bank of swift-flowing Alpheus, now traverses the lofty grove's deep places, where cool Lerna is transparent with its crystal shoals, and the silent forest-depths, wherein the complaining birds make music, and the ash-trees and ancient beeches quiver, moving gently in the breeze.
veteresque fagi. iuvit aut amnis vagi pressisse ripas, caespite aut nudo leves duxisse somnos, sive fons largus citas defundit undas sive per flores novos fugiente dulcis murmurat rivo sonus.

Excussa silvis poma compescunt famem et fraga parvis vulsa dumetis cibos faciles ministrant. regios luxus procul est impetus fugisse. sollicito bibunt auro superbi; quam iuvat nuda manu captasse fontem! certior somnus premit secura duro membra versantem toro.
non in recessu furta et obscuro improbus
quarerit cubili seque multiplici timens domo recondit; aethera ac lucem petit et teste caelo vivit.

Hoc equidem reor
vixisse ritu prima quos mixtos deis profudit aetas. nullus his auri fuit caecus cupidio, nullus in campo sacer divisit agros arbiter populis lapis;
nondum secabant credulae pontum rates;
sua quisque norat maria. non vasto aggere
crebraque turre cinxerant urbes latus;
non arma saeva miles aptabat manu
nec torta clausas fregerat saxo gravi ballista portas, iussa nec dominum pati iuncto ferebat terra servitium bove;
sed arva per se feta poseentes nihil pavere gentes, silva nativas opes et opaca dederant antra nativas domos.

Rupere foedus impius luceri furor et ira praeceps quaeque succensas agit libido mentes; venit imperii sitis cruenta, factus praeda maiori minor,
Sweet it is to lie on the bank of some vagrant stream, or on the bare sward to quaff light-stealing slumbers, be it where some copious spring pours down its hurrying waters, or through budding flowers some brook murmurs sweetly as it glides along.

515 Fruit shaken from the forest trees stays his hunger, and berries plucked from the low bushes afford an easy meal. It is his passion to flee far from royal luxury. 'Tis from anxious cups of gold that the proud drink! how sweet to catch up with the bare hand the water of the spring! Here slumber more surely soothes as he lays him down, care-free, on his hard bed. He guiltily plots no stealthy deeds in secret chamber and on a hidden couch, nor hides fearfully away in his labyrinthine palace; 'tis the air and light he seeks, and his life has heaven for its witness.

525 'Twas in such wise, methinks, they lived whom the primal age produced, in friendly intercourse with gods. They had no blind love of gold; no sacred boundary-stone, judging betwixt peoples, separated fields on the spreading plain; not yet did rash vessels plough the sea; each man knew only his native waters. Then cities were not surrounded with massive walls, set with many towers; no soldier applied his fierce hand to arms, nor did hurling engines burst through closed gates with heavy stones. Not yet did earth, suffering a master's rule, endure the hard toil of the yoked ox; but the fields, fruitful of themselves, fed nations who asked nothing more; the woods gave men their natural wealth, and shady caves afforded natural homes.

540 Unholy passion for gain broke up this peaceful life, headlong wrath, and lust which sets men's hearts aflame. Next came cruel thirst for power; the weaker was made the stronger's prey, and might pro iure vires esse. tum primum manu bellare nuda\(^1\) saxaque et ramos rudes vertere in arma. non erat gracili levis armata ferro cornus aut longo latus mucrone cingens ensis aut crista procul galeae comantes; tela faciebat dolor.
inventit artes bellicus Mavors novas et mille formas mortis. hinc terras cruer infecit omnes fusus et rubuit mare.
tum scelera dempto fine per cunctas domos iere, nullum caruit exemplo nefas.
a fratre frater, dextera nati parens cecidit, maritus coniugis ferro iacet perimuntque fetus impiae matres suos.
taceo novercam; mitior nil est feris.
sed dux malorum femina; haec scelerum artifex obsedit animos, huius incestis stupris fumant tot urbes, bella tot gentes gerunt et versa ab imo regna tot populos premunt.
sileantur aliae; sola coniunx Aegei, Medea, reddet feminas dirum genus.

\section*{NVTRIX}

Cur omnium fit culpa paucarum scelus

\section*{HIPPOLYTVS}

Detestor omnes, horreo fugio execror. sit ratio, sit natura, sit dirus furor, odisse placuit. ignibus iunges aquas et amica ratibus ante promittet vada incerta Syrtis, ante ab extremo sinu
Hesperia Tethys lucidum attollet diem

\(^1\) Leo comments: post nuda hoc fere desideramus: tela tum saeva manu | aptare adorti.
HIPPOLYTUS

took the place of right. At first men fought with naked fists, [next they began to lay hand to deadly weapons] and turned stones and rough clubs to the use of arms. As yet there was no light cornel-shaft, tipped with tapering iron; no long, sharp-pointed sword hung at the side; no helmets crested with plumes gleamed from afar; rage furnished arms. War-like Mars invented new modes of strife and a thousand forms of death. From this source streams of blood stained all lands and the sea grew red. Then crime stalked unchecked through every home and no impious deed lacked precedent. Brother was slain by brother, father by the hand of son, husband lay dead by the sword of wife, and unnatural mothers destroyed their own offspring. I say naught of stepmothers; they are no whit more merciful than the beasts. But the leader of all wickedness is woman; 'tis she, cunning mistress of crime, besets our minds; 'tis by her foul adulteries so many cities smoke, so many nations war, so many peoples lie crushed beneath the ruins of their kingdoms, utterly o'erthrown. Let others be unnamed; Aegeus' wife alone, Medea, will prove that women are an accursed race.

NURSE

Why make the crime of few the blame of all?

HIPPOLYTUS

I abominate them all, I dread, shun, curse them all. Be it reason, be it instinct, be it wild rage: 'tis my joy to hate them. Sooner shall you mate fire and water, sooner shall the dangerous Syrtes offer to ships a friendly passage, sooner shall Tethys from 1 Translating Leo's suggested interpolation.

SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

et ora dammis blanda praebebunt lupi,
quam victus animum feminae mitem geram.

NVTRIX

Saepe obstinatis induit frenos Amor et odia mutat. regna materna aspice;
illae ferores sentiunt Veneris iugum.
testar is stud unicus gentis puer.

HIPPOLYTVS

Solamen unum matris amissae fero, odisse quod iam feminas omnes licet.

NVTRIX

Vt dura cautes undique intractabilis
resistit undis et lacessentes aquas longe remittit, verba sic spernit mea.
Sed Phaedra praeceps graditur, impatiens morae.
quo se dabit fortuna? quo verget furor?
terrae repente corpus exanimum accidit
et ora morti similis obduxit color.
attolle vultus, dimove vocis moras.
tuus en, alumna, temet Hippolytus tenet.
362
HIPPOLYTUS

her far western shore bring in bright dawn, and wolves gaze on does with eyes caressing, than I, my hate o'ercome, have kindly thought for woman.

NURSE

Oft-times doth Love put curb on stubborn hearts and change their hate. Look at thy mother's kingdom; those warlike women feel the yoke of Venus. Thou bearest witness to this, of her race the only son.¹

HIPPOLYTUS

I count it the one solace for my lost mother, that now I may hate all womankind.

NURSE [aside]

As some hard crag, on all sides unassailable, resists the waves, and flings far back the flood importunate, so does he spurn my words.

⁵⁸³ But Phaedra is hurrying towards us, impatient of delay. Whither will fortune go? Whither will madness tend?

[PHAEDRA enters and falls as in a swoon.]

Her fainting body has fallen suddenly to earth and death-like pallor has overspread her face.

[HIPPOLYTUS hastens to raise her in his arms.]

Lift thy face, break silence. See, my daughter, thine own Hippolytus embraces thee.

¹ It is said that the Amazons were accustomed to kill all boys born to them. Hippolytus, being the son of Theseus, had been spared.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

PHAEODRA

Quis me dolori reddit atque aestus graves
reponit animo? quam bene excideram mihi! 590

HIPPOLYTVS

Cur dulce munus redditae lucis fugis?

PHAEODRA

Aude, anime, tempta, perage mandatum tuum.
intrepida constent verba; qui timide rogat
docet negare. magna pars sceleris mei olim peracta est; serus est nobis pudor—amavimus nefanda. si coepta exsequor, foran ingali crimen abscondam face.
honesta quaedam scelera successus facit.
en incipe, anime!—Commodes paulum, precor,
secretus aures. si quis est abeat comes. 600

HIPPOLYTVS

En locus ab omni liber arbitrio vacat.

PHAEODRA

Sed ora coeptis transitum verbis negant;
vis magna vocem mittit et maior tenet.
vos testor omnes, caelites, hoc quod volo — 604

HIPPOLYTVS

Animusne cupiens aliquid effari nequit?

1 Leo deletes the fragmentary line (605): me nolle.

364
HIPPOLYTUS

PHAEDRA [recovering]

Who gives me back to grief and again sets in my soul this fever dire? How blest was my unconsciousness of self!

HIPPOLYTUS

Why dost thou shun the sweet boon of life restored?

PHAEDRA [aside]

Courage! my soul, essay, fulfil thine own behest. Fearless be thy words, and firm; who makes timid request, invites denial. The chief part of my guilt is long since accomplished; too late for me is modesty—I have loved basely. If I follow up what I have begun, perchance I may hide my sin behind the marriage torch. Success makes some sins honest. Come now, my soul, begin! [To HIPPOLYTUS.] Lend ear to me privately a little while, I pray. If any comrade of thine is here, let him withdraw.

HIPPOLYTUS

Behold, the place is free from all witnesses.

PHAEDRA

But my lips refuse passage to the words I seek to frame; some strong power urges me to speak, and a stronger holds me back. I call you all to witness, you heavenly powers, that what I wish—

HIPPOLYTUS

Thy heart desires somewhat and cannot tell it out?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

PHÆDRA
Curae leves locuntur, ingentes stupent.

HIPPOLYTVS
Committe curas auribus, mater, meis.

PHÆDRA
Matris superbum est nomen et nimium potens;
nostros humilius nomen affectus decet;
me vel sororem, Hippolyte, vel famulam voca,
famulamque potius; omne servitium feram.
non me per altas ire si iubias nives,
pigeat gelatis ingredi Pindi iugis;
non, si per ignes ire et infesta agmina,
cuncter paratis ensibus pectus dare.
mandata recipere sceptrum, me famulam accipe;
te imperia regere, me decet iussa exsequi
muliebre non est regna tutari urbiuim;
tu qui iuventae flore præmaevi viges
cives paterno fortis imperio rege,
sinu receptam supplicem ac servam tege.
miserere viduae—

HIPPOLYTVS
Summus hoc omen deus avertat! aderit sospes actutum parens.

PHÆDRA
Regni tenacis dominus et tacitae Stygis
nullam relictos fecit ad superos viam;

1 Leo deletes this line.
HIPPOLYTUS

PHAEDRA

Light troubles speak; the weighty are struck dumb.

HIPPOLYTUS

Entrust thy troubles to my ears, mother.

PHAEDRA

Mother—that name is too proud and high; a humbler name better suits my feelings. Call me sister, Hippolytus, or slave—yes, slave is better; I will endure all servitude. Shouldst thou bid me walk through deep-drifted snows, I would not shrink from faring along the cold peaks of Pindus; shouldst thou send me through fire and midst deadly battle ranks, I would not hesitate to offer my breast to naked swords. Take thou in my stead the sceptre committed to my care, accept me for thy slave; it becomes thee to bear sway, me, to obey thine orders. It is no woman's task to watch o'er royal cities. Do thou, in the vigour of thy youth's first bloom, rule o'er the citizens, strong in thy father's power; take to thine arms thy suppliant, and protect thy slave. Pity my widowhood—

HIPPOLYTUS

The most high God avert that omen! In safety will my father soon return.

PHAEDRA

The overlord of the fast-holding realm and of the silent Styx has made no way to the upper world
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

thalami remittet ille raptorem sui?—
nisi forte amori placidus et Pluton sedet.

HIPPOLYTUS

Illum quidem aequi caelites reducem dabunt.

sed dum tenebit vota in incerto deus,
pietate caros debita fratres colam et te merebor esse ne viduam putes ac tibi parentis ipse supplebo locum.

PHAEDRA

O spes amantum credula, o fallax Amor
satisne dixit? 1 precibus admotis agam.
Miserere, tacitae mentis exaudi preces—
libet loqui pigetque.

HIPPOLYTUS

Quodnam istud malum est?

PHAEDRA

Quod in novercam cadere vix credas malum.

HIPPOLYTUS

Ambigua voce verba perplexa iacis;
effare aperte.

So A: Leo dixi.

368
HIPPOLYTUS

once quitted; and will he let the robber 1 of his couch go back? Unless, perchance, even Pluto sits smiling upon love!

HIPPOLYTUS

Him surely the kindly deities will bring again. But while God still holds our prayers in doubt, with due affection will I care for my dear brothers, and so deserve of thee that thou shalt not deem thee widowed, and myself will fill for thee my father's place.

PHAEDRA [aside]

O credulous hope of lovers, O deceitful love! Has he not said enough? I'll bring my prayers to bear upon him and attack.

[To HIPPOLYTUS.]

636 Have pity! hearken to the prayers my heart may not express. I long—and am ashamed—to speak.

HIPPOLYTUS

What, pray, is this thy trouble?

PHAEDRA

A trouble thou wouldst scarce believe could befall a stepmother.

HIPPOLYTUS

Words of doubtful meaning thou utterest with riddling lips. Speak out and plainly.

1 See Index s.v. "Pirithoüs," and l. 98, note.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

PHAEDRA

Pectus insanum vapor amorque torret. intimis fervet ferus visceribus ignis mersus et venas latens ut agilis altas flamma percurrit trabes.

HIPPOLYTUS

Amore ncmpe Thesei casto furis?

PHAEDRA

Hippolyte, sic est: Thesei vultus amo illos priores quos tulit quondam puer, cum prima puras barba signaret genas monstrique caecam Cnosii vidit domum et longa curva fila collegit via.

quis tum ille fulsit! presserant vitiae comam et ora flavus terna tinguebat pudor;
inercant lacertis mollibus fortes tori; tuaeque Phoebes vultus aut Phoebi mei, tuusque potius—talis, en talis fuit cum placuit hosti, sic tulit celsum caput. in te magis refulget incomptus decor;
est genitor in te totus et torvae tamen pars aliqua matris miscet ex aequo decus; in ore Graio Scythicus apparet rigor.

si cum parente Creticum intrasses fretum, tibi fila potius nostra nevisset soror.
te, te, soror, quacumque siderei poli in parte fulges, invoco ad causam parem.
domus sorores una corripuit duas: te genitor, at me natus.

1 Leo deletes l. 642: penitus medullas atque per venas meat.

370
'Tis burning love scorches my maddened heart. A hot fire glows deep in my inmost vitals and hides darkly in my veins, as when nimble flames dart through deep-set timbers.

'HIPPOLYTUS

'Tis with pure love for Theseus thou dost burn?

PHAEDRA

'Hippolytus, 'tis thus with me: Theseus' features I love, those former looks of his which once as a youth he had, when his first beard marked his smooth cheeks, when he looked on the dark home of the Cretan monster, and gathered in the long thread o'er the winding way. How glorious was he then! Fillets bound his locks, and his young face glowed with the blush of modesty; strong muscles lay beneath the softness of his arms; and his features were as of thy Phoebe or of my Phoebus—or, rather, were thy own. Such, yes, such was he when he won his foeman's¹ favour; just so he bore his head erect. In thee more brightly shines a beauty unadorned; all of thy sire is in thee, and yet some portion of thy mother's sternness blends with an equal charm; on Grecian face shows Scythian austerity. If with thy father thou hadst come to the shores of Crete, for thee and not for him would my sister have spun the thread. Thee, thee, O sister, wherever amidst the starry heavens thou shinest, I call to aid for a cause like to thine own. One house has ruined two sisters: thee, the father, but me, the son.

[She kneels to HIPPOLYTUS.]

³e. Ariadne, daughter of the foe of Athens.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

En supplex iacet
adlapsa genibus regiae proles domus.
respersa nulla labe et intacta, innocens
tibi mutor uni. certa descendii ad preces;
finem hic dolori faciet aut vitae dies.
miserere amantis—

HIPPOLYTUS

Magne regnator deum,
tam lentus audis scelera? tam lentus vides?
et quando saeva fulmen emittes manu,
si nunc serenum est? omnis impulsus ruat aether et atris nubibus condat diem, ac versa retro sidera obliquos agant
retorta cursus. tuque, sidereum caput, radiate Titan, tu nefas stirpis tuae
speculare? lucem merge et in tenebras fuge.
cur dextra, divum rector atque hominum, vacat
 tua nec trisulca mundus ardescit face?
in me tonsa, me fige, me velox cremet
transactus ignis. sum nocens, merui mori;
placui novercae.

Dignus en stupris ego?
scelerique tanto visus ego solus tibi
materia facilis? hoc meas meruit rigor?
o scelere vincens omne feminine genus,
o maius ausa matre monstrifera malum

1 genetrice peior! illa se tantum stupro contaminavit, et tamen tacitum diu

1 Leo deletes this line.
crimen biformi partus exhibuit nota scelusque matris arguit vultu truci
ambiguus infans—ille te venter tulit.
HIPPOLYTUS

See, a king's daughter lies fallen at thy knees, a suppliant. Without spot or stain, pure, innocent, I am changed for thee alone. With fixed purpose have I humbled myself to prayer; this day shall bring an end either to my misery or my life. Have pity on her who loves—

HIPPOLYTUS

Great ruler of the gods, dost thou so calmly hear crimes, so calmly look upon them? And when wilt thou send forth thy thunderbolt with angry hand, if now 'tis cloudless? Let all the sky fall in shattered ruin, and in murky clouds hide the day; let the stars be turned backward and, wrenched aside, go athwart their courses. And thou, star of stars, O radiant Sun, dost thou behold this shame of thy race? Hide thy light and take refuge in darkness. Why is thy right hand empty, O ruler of gods and men? why is not the world in flames by thy forked lightning? Me let thy thunder smite, pierce me, me let thy swift-darting fire consume. I am guilty, I have deserved to die; I have stirred my stepmother to love.

[To Phaedra.]

Look thou! Am I fitted for adulteries? For such crime did I alone seem to thee an easy instrument? Hath my austerity earned this? O thou, who hast outsinned the whole race of women, who hast dared a greater evil than thy monster-bearing mother, thou worse than she who bore thee! She did but pollute herself with her shameful lust, and yet her offspring by its two-shaped infamy displayed her crime, though long concealed, and by his fierce visage the hybrid child made clear his mother's guilt. That was the womb that bore thee. Oh,
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

o ter quaterque prospero fato dati quos hausit et peremit et leto dedit odium dolusque. genitor, invideo tibi;
Colchide noverca maius haec, maius malum est.

PHAEDRA

Et 'psa nostrae fata cognosco domus:
fugienda petimus; sed mei non sum potens.
te vel per ignes, per mare insanum sequar
rupesque et amnes, unda quos torrens rapit;
quacumque gressus tuleris hac amens agar—
iterum, superbe, genibus advolvor tuis.

HIPPOLYTUS

Procul impudicos corpore a casto amove
tactus. quid hoc est? etiam in amplexus ruit?
stringatur ensis, merita supplicia exigat,
en impudicum crine contorto caput laeva reflexi. iustior numquam focis
datus tuis est sanguis, arquitenens dea.

PHAEDRA

Hippolyte, nunc me compotem voti facis;
sanas furentem. maius hoc voto meo est,
salto ut pudore manibus immoriar tuis.

HIPPOLYTUS

Abscede, vive ne quid exores, et hic
contactus ensis deserat castum latus.
HIPPOLYTUS

Hippolytus, now dost thou grant me fulfilment of my prayer; thou healest me of my madness. This is beyond my prayer, that, with my honour saved, 'tis by thy hands I die.

[She grasps the sword and points it at her breast.]

HIPPOLYTUS

Begone, live, lest thou have thy wish; and let this sword, polluted by thy touch, quit my chaste side.

[He throws his sword from him.]

1 Medea, who had tried to murder Theseus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

quis eluet me Tanais aut quae barbaris Maeotis undis Pontico incumbens mari?
non ipse toto magnus Oceano pater
tantum expiarit sceleris. o silvae, o ferae!

NVTRIX

Deprensa culpa est. anime, quid segnis stupes?
regeramus ipsi crimen atque ulter impiam 720
Venerem arguamus. scelere velandum est scelus;
tutissimum est inferre, cum timeas, gradum.
ausae priores simus an passae nefas,
secreta cum sit culpa, quis testis sciet?

Adeste, Athenae! fida famulorum manus, fer opem! nefandi raptor Hippolytus stupri
instat premitque, mortis intentat metum, ferro pudicam terret—en praeceps abit
ensemque trepida liquit attonitus fuga.
pignus tenemus sceleris. hanc maestam prius 730
recreate. crinis tractus et lacerae comae ut sunt remaneant, facinoris tanti notae.
perferte in urbem. recipe iam sensus, era.
quid te ipsa lacerans omnium aspectus fugis?
mens inpudicam facere, non casus solet.

876
HIPPOLYTUS

What Tanaïs will cleanse me, what Maeotis, with its barbaric waves rushing into the Pontic sea? Not great Father Neptune's self, with his whole ocean, could wash away so much of guilt. O woods! O beasts!

[He rushes off into the depths of the forest.]

NURSE

Her sin has been found out. O soul, why dost stand inactive and aghast? We must throw the crime back on him himself, and ourselves charge him with incestuous love. Crime must be concealed by crime. 'Tis safest, when in fear, to force the attack. Whether we first dared the sin or suffered it, since it was done in secret, who of his own knowledge is to testify?

[She raises her voice in loud outcry.]

Help, Athens, help! Faithful band of slaves, come to our aid! The ravisher, Hippolytus, with vile, lustful intent, is after us; he is upon us and threatens us with death; with the sword he is terrifying our chaste queen—ah! he has rushed headlong forth and, dazed, in panic flight, has left his sword. We hold the proof of guilt. But the stricken queen, revive her first. Let her dishevelled hair, her torn locks, stay even as they are, the marks of that great guilt. Bear her to the city. Now come back to consciousness, my mistress. Why dost tear thyself and shun the glances of us all? 'Tis thinking makes impure, not circumstance.

[Exeunt.

377
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

CHORVS

Fugit insanae similis procellae,
ocior nubes glomerante Coro,
ocior cursum rapiente flamma,
stella cum ventis agitata longos
porrigit ignes.

Conferat tecum decus omne priscum
fama miratrix senioris aevi;
pulchrior tanto tua forma lucet,
clarior quanto micat orbe pleno
cum suos ignes coeunte cornu iunxit et curru properante pernox exerit vultus rubicunda Phoebe nec tenent stellae faciem minores, talis est, primas referens tenebras,
nuntius noctis, modo lotus undis
Hesperus, pulsis iterum tenebris Lucifer idem.

Et tu, thyrsigera Liber ab India,
intonsa iuvenis perpetuum coma, tigres pampinea cuspide territans
ac mitra cohibens cornigerum caput,
non vinceas rigidas Hippolyti comas,
ne vultus nimium suspicias tuos;
omnes per populos fabula distulit
Phaedrae quem Bromio praetulerit soror.

Anceps forma bonum mortalibus,
exigui donum breve temporis,
ut velox celeri pede laberis!
Non sic prata novo vere decentia
aestatis calidae despoliat vapor, saevit solstitio cum medius dies
et noctes brevibus praecipitant rotis;
HIPPOLYTUS

CHORUS

He fled like a raging tempest, swifter than cloud-collecting Corus,\(^1\) swifter than flame which speeds on its way when a star,\(^2\) driven by the winds, extends its long-trailing fire.

Let fame compare with thee\(^3\) all ancient beauty, fame, admirer of the olden time; as much fairer does thy beauty shine as gleams more brightly the full-orbed moon when with meeting horns she has joined her fires, when at the full with speeding chariot blushing Phoebe shows her face and the lesser stars fade out of sight. Such as he is the messenger of night, who brings the first shadows back, Hesperus,\(^4\) fresh bathed in ocean; and when the shadows have been driven away again, Lucifer\(^5\) also.

And thou, Bacchus, from thyrsus-bearing India, with unshorn locks, perpetually young, thou who frightenest tigers with thy vine-clad spear, and with a turban bindest thy hornèd head—thou wilt not surpass Hippolytus' crisp locks: Admire not thou thy beauty overmuch; story has spread through every nation whom\(^6\) the sister of Phaedra preferred to Bromius.

O beauty, doubtful boon to mortals, brief gift for but a little time, how swiftly on quick foot thou dost slip away!

Not so swiftly are the meadows, beauteous with early spring, despoiled by the hot summer's glow, when with solstitial fire midday rages, and the nights sweep headlong in their brief course.

---

\(^1\) The north-west wind. \\
\(^2\) A meteor. \\
\(^3\) Hippolytus. \\
\(^4\) The evening star. \\
\(^5\) The morning star. \\
\(^6\) i.e. Theseus, whom Ariadne would have preferred to Bacchus (Bromius) had not Theseus deserted her.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

languescunt folio ut lilia pallido, et gratae capiti deficiunt comae
et fulgor teneris qui radiat genis momento rapitur nullaque non dies
formonsi spolium corporis abstulit.
res est forma fugax; quis sapiens bono confidat fragili? dum licet, utere.
tempus te tacitum subruit, horaque
semper praeterita deterior subit.

Quid deserta petis? tutior aviis
non est forma locis. te nemor abdito, cum Titan medium constituit diem,
cingent turba licens Naides improbae,
formonsos solitae claudere fontibus,
et somnis facient insidias tuis
lascivae nemorum deae

Panas quae Dryades montivagos petunt aut te stellifero despiciens polo sidus post veteres Arcadas editum currus non poterit flectere candidos.
et nuper rubuit, nullaque lucidis
nubes sordidior vultibus obstitit;
at nos solliciti numine turbido,
tractam Thessalicis carminibus rati,
tinuitus dedimus; tu fueras labor et tu causa morae, te dea noctium
dum spectat celeres sustinuit vias.

Vexent hanc faciem frigora parcius,
haec solem facies rarius appetat;
lucebit Pario marmore clarius.
quam grata est facies torva viriliter et pondus veteris triste supercili!
Phoebo colla licet splendidida compares.

1 Leo deletes this line.
HIPPOLYTUS

As lilies wither and their leaves grow pale, so do our pleasing locks fall from the head, and the bright glow which shines on youthful cheeks is ravished in a moment and no day takes not spoil of our body's beauty. Beauty is a fleeting thing. Who that is wise would trust so frail a blessing? Enjoy it while thou mayest. Time is silently undermining thee, and an hour, worse than the last, is ever creeping on.

Why seek desert places? Beauty is no safer in pathless regions. Hide thee in the woods when Titan has brought midday, and the saucy Naïds, a wanton throng, will encompass thee, wont in their waters to imprison shapely boys, and for thy slumbers the frolicsome goddesses of the groves will lay their snares, the Dryads, who pursue Pans wandering on the mountains. Or else, looking down on thee from the starry heavens, the orb that was born after the old Arcadians will lose control of her white-shining car. And lately she blushed fiery red, though no staining cloud obscured her bright face; but we, anxious for our troubled goddess, thinking her harried by Thessalian charms, made loud jingling sounds: yet 'twas thou hadst been her trouble, thou the cause of her delaying; while gazing on thee the goddess of the night checked her swift course.

This face of thine let frosts more rarely ravage, let this face more seldom woo the sun; 'twill shine more bright than Parian marble. How pleasing is the manly sternness of thy face and the severe dignity of thine old-seeming brow! With Phoebus mayst thou match that gleaming neck. Him locks

1 The poet has in mind the case of Hylas.
2 Luna. The reference is to Luna and Endymion.
3 The Arcadians were said to be older than the moon.
4 The chorus concludes that it was Hippolytus, and not Endymion, who of late had caused the moon's perturbations.
illum caesaries nescia colligi perfundens umeros ornat et integit;
te frons hirta decet, te brevior coma nulla lege iacens. tu licet asperos pugnacesque deos viribus audeas et vasti spatio vincere corporis;
aequas Herculeos nam iuvenis toros, Martis belligeri pectore latior.
si dorso libeat cornipedis vehi,
frenis Castorea mobilior manu Spartanum poteris flectere Cyllaron.
amenum digitum tende prioribus
et totis iaculum dirige viribus;
tam longe, dociles spicula figere,
non mittent gracilem Cretas harundinem.
aut si tela modo spargere Parthico
in caelum placeat, nulla sine alite descendent, tepido viscere condita
praedam de medii nubibus afferent.
Raris forma viris (saecula prospice)
inpunita fuit. te melior deus tutum praetereat formaque nobilis daemis senii limina transeat.¹

Quid sinat inausum feminae praeceps furor?
nefanda iuveni crimina insonti apparat.
en scelera! quaerit crine lacerato fidem,
decus omne turbat capitis, umectat genas.
instruitur omni fraude feminea dolus.
Sed iste quisnam est, regium in vultu decus

¹ So A: Leo monstret imaginem.
HIPPOLYTUS

that will not be confined, streaming o'er his shoulders, adorn and robe; but thee a shaggy brow, thee shorter locks, lying in disarray, become. 'Tis thine with manly strength to dare meet the rough and warlike gods and by the spread of thy huge body to overcome them; for even in youth thou dost match the muscles of a Hercules, art broader of chest than war-waging Mars. Shouldst thou be pleased to ride a horn-footed horse, with hand more agile on the rein than Castor's thou couldst guide the Spartan Cyllarus. Stretch thong with thy first fingers\(^1\) and shoot the dart straight with all thy might; still not so far, though skilled to hurl the dart, will Cretans send the slender shaft. Or should it please thee to shoot thy arrows into the sky, in Parthian fashion, none will come down without its bird, but, deep fixed in the warm breast, will bring prey from the very clouds.

820 To few men hath beauty (scan the ages past) not brought its penalty. May God, more merciful, pass thee by unharmed, and may thy illustrious beauty pass the threshold o'er of shapeless age.

824 What would the woman's headlong madness leave undared? She is preparing outrageous charges against this guileless youth. Behold her guilty wiles\(^1\) By her torn hair she seeks to be believed; she disorders all the glory of her locks, bedews her cheeks with tears. She is marshalling her plot by every art that woman knows.

[A man is seen approaching who proves to be THESEUS.]

829 But who is this, wearing a regal dignity on his

\(^1\) i.e. the thumb and forefinger.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

830
gerens et alto vertice attollens caput?

840
ut ora iuveni paria Perithoo gerit,

ni languido pallore canderent genae

stareteque recta squalor incultus coma.

eu ipse Theseus redditus terris adest.

THESEVS

Tandem profugi noctis aeternae plagam
vastoque manes carcere umbrantem polum,
et vix cupitum sufferunt oculi diem.
iam quarta Eleusin dona Triptolemi secat paremque totiens libra composuit diem, ambiguus ut me sortis ignotae labor

detinuit inter mortis et vitae mala.
pars una vitae mansit extincto mihi:
sensus malorum. finis Alcides fuit,
qui cum revulsum Tartaro abstraheret canem,
me quoque supernas pariter ad sedes tuit.
sed fessa virtus robore antiquo caret
trepidantque gressus. heu, labor quantus fuit Phlegethonte ab imo petere longinquum aethera pariterque mortem fugere et Alciden sequi.

Quis fremitus aures flebilis pepulit meas?

expromat aliquis. luctus et lacrimae et dolor,
in limine ipso maesta lamentatio?
auspicia ¹ digna prorsus inferno hospite.

NVTRIX

Tenet obstinatum Phaedra consilium necis fletusque nostros spernit ac morti imminet.

¹ hospitia Grotius.
face and with head borne high? How like the young Pirithoüs he is in countenance, were his cheeks not so deathly pale and did not unkempt squalor stiffen in his bristling hair. See, it is Theseus himself, restored to the upper world.

THESEUS

At last have I escaped the realm of eternal night, the dark world which in vast prison-house o’ershades the dead, and scarcely do my eyes endure the longed-for light. Now for the fourth time is Eleusis harvesting the bounty of Triptolemus,1 as many times has Libra made day equal unto night, since dubious battling with an unknown fate has kept me between the ills of death and life. Though dead to all things else, one part of life remained to me—my sense of ills. Alcides was the end, who, when he dragged the dog by violence out of Tartarus, brought me, too, along with him to the upper world. But my strength is spent, has lost its old-time vigour, and my steps do falter. Alas, how hard a struggle it was from lowest Phlegethon to attain the far realms of air, at once to flee from death and follow Hercules!

650 But what is this tearful outcry that strikes my ears? Let someone tell me. Grieving and tears and woe, and on my very threshold sad lamentation?—auspices that well befit a guest from hell.

NURSE

Phaedra holds unbending purpose of self-murder; she scorns our tears and is on the very edge of death.

1 Wheat: see Index s. v. "Triptolemus."
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

THESEVS
Quae causa leti? reduce cur moritur viro?

NVTRIX
Haec ipsa letum causa maturum attulit.

THESEVS
Perplexa magnum verba nescio quid tegunt. effare aperte quis gravet mentem dolor.

NVTRIX
Haut pandit ulli; maesta secretum occulit statuitque secum ferre quo moritur malum. iam perge, quaeso, perge; properato est opus.

THESEVS
Reserate clausos regii postes laris.
O socia thalami, sicine adventum viri et expetiti coniugis vultum excipis? quin ense viduas dexteram atque animum mihi restituis et te quidquid e vita fugat expromis?

PHAEDRA
Eheu, per tui sceptrum imperi, magnanime Theseu, perque natorum indolem tuosque reditus perque iam cineres meos, permitte mortem.
HIPPOLYTUS

THESEUS

What cause for death? Why die, now that her husband is come back?

NURSE

That very cause has brought with it speedy death.

THESEUS

Thy riddling words some weighty matter hide. Tell me plainly what grief weighs on her mind.

NURSE

She discloses it to none; though sorrowing, she hides her secret grief and is resolved to take with her the woe whereof she dies. But come now, I pray thee, come; there is need of haste.

THESEUS

Unbar the closed portals of the royal house.

[The doors are thrown open and THESEUS encounters his wife just within.]

864 O partner of my couch, is it thus thou welcomest thy lord's return and the face of thy long-sought husband? Come, put away the sword from thy right hand, give me heart again, and whatever is driving thee out of life, declare it.

PHAEDRA

Alas, O Theseus, great of soul, by the sceptre of thy kingdom, by thy children's lives, by thy return, and by my body already doomed to dust, allow my death.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

THESEVS
Causa quae cogit mori?

PHAEDRA
Si causa leti dicitur, fructus perit.

THESEVS
Nemo istud alius, me quidem excepto, audiet.

PHAEDRA
Aures pudica coniugis solas timet.

THESEVS
Effare; fido pectore arcana occulam.

PHAEDRA
Alium silere quod voles, primus sile.

THESEVS
Leti facultas nulla continget tibi.

PHAEDRA
Mori volenti desse mors numquam potest.

THESEVS
Quod sit luendum morte delictum indica.

PHAEDRA
Quod vivo.
HIPPOLYTUS

THESEUS

What cause forces thee to die?

PHAEDRA

If the cause of my death is told, its fruit is lost.

THESEUS

No one else shall hear it, save myself.

PHAEDRA

A chaste woman dreads her husband's ears alone.

THESEUS

Speak out; in my true heart will I hide thy secret.

PHAEDRA

Where thou wouldst have another silence keep, keep silence first thyself.

THESEUS

No means of death shall be granted unto thee.

PHAEDRA

If one wills to die, death can never fail.

THESEUS

Tell me what sin is to be purged by death.

PHAEDRA

That I still live.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

THESEVS

Lacrimae nonne te nostrae movent? 880

PHAEDRA

Mors optima est perire lacrimandum suis.

THESEVS

Silere pergit. verbere ac vinclis anus
altrixque prodet quidquid hacte fari abnuit.
vincite ferro. verberum vis extrahat
secreta mentis.

PHAEDRA

Ipsa iam fabor, mare.

THESEVS

Quidnam ora macsta avertis et lacrimas genis
subito coortas veste praetenta optegis?

PHAEDRA

Te, te, creator caelitum, testem invoco et te, coruscum lucis aetheriae iubar, ex cuius ortu 1 nostra dependet domus,
temptata precibus restiti; ferro ac minis
non cessit animus; vim tamen corpus tulit.
labem hanc pudoris eluet noster cruor.

THESEVS

Quis, ede, nostri decoris eversor fuit?

1 Leo conjectures ex quibus utrimque.

890
HIPPOLYTUS

THESEUS

Do not my tears move thee?

PHAEDRA

'Tis best to die a death to be wept by friends.

THESEUS

She persists in silence. Then by scourge and bonds shall her old nurse reveal whatever she will not tell. [To attendants.] Bind her with chains. Let the power of the scourge drag forth the secrets of her soul.

PHAEDRA

Hold! I will myself confess.

THESEUS

Why dost turn away thy sorrowing face and hide with veiling robe the tears that suddenly o'erflow thy cheeks?

PHAEDRA

Thee, thee, O sire of the heavenly gods, I call to witness, and thee,¹ bright radiance of celestial light, on whom as founder this house of ours depends—though sorely tempted, I withstood his prayers; to sword and threats my soul yielded not; yet did my body bear his violence. This stain of shame shall my blood wash away.

THESEUS

Who, tell me, was the destroyer of my honour?

¹ Phoebus, the father of Phaedra's mother, Pasiphaë.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

PHAEDRA

Quem rere minime.

THESEVS

Quis sit audire expeto.

PHAEDRA

Hic dicet ensis quem tumultu territus
liquit stuprator civium accursum timens.

THESEVS

Quod facinus, heu me, cerno? quod monstrum
intuor?
regale parvis asperum signis ebur
capulo refulget, generis Actaei decus.
sed ipse quonam evasit?

PHAEDRA

Hi trepidum fuga
videre famuli concitum celeri pede.

THESEVS

Pro sancta Pietas, pro gubernator poli et qui secundum fluctibus regnum moves,
unde ista venit generis infandi lues?
hunc Graia tellus aluit an Taurus Scythes Colchusque Phasis? redit ad auctores genus stirpemque primam degener sanguis referit.
est prorsus iste gentis armiferae furor,
HIPPOLYTUS

PHAEDRA
Whom thou least thinkest.

THESEUS
Who is he? I demand to hear.

PHAEDRA
This sword will tell, which, in his panic terror, the ravisher left behind, fearing the gathering of the citizens.

THESEUS
Ah me! What villainy do I behold? What monstrous thing do I see? The royal hilt of ivory, embossed with tiny figures, gleams before me, the glory of the Athenian race. But he, whither has he escaped?

PHAEDRA
The slaves, here, saw him speeding swift away in headlong flight.

THESEUS
O holy Piety, O ruler of the heavens, and thou who with thy billows dost sway the second realm, whence came this infection of infamy in our stock? Was that man nurtured by the land of Greece or by the Scythian Taurus and Colchian Phasis? The breed reverts to its progenitors and debased blood reproduces the primal stock. This, truly, is the madness of that warlike race,\(^1\) to contemn Venus'\(^2\)

\(^1\) Neptune. For the "second realm" see Index s.v. "Neptune."

\(^2\) The Amazons.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

odisse Veneris foedera et castum diu vulgare populis corpus. o tetrum genus nullaque victum lege melioris soli!
ferae quoque ipsae Veneris evitant nefas
generisque leges inscius servat pudor.
ubi vultus ille et ficta maiestas viri
atque habitus horrens, prisca et antiqua appetens morumque senium triste et affectus graves?
o vita fallax, abditos sensus geris
animisque pulchram turpibus faciem induis:
pudor impudentem celat, audacem quies,
pietas nefandum; vera fallaces probant
simulantque molles dura.

Silvarum incola

ille efferatus castus intactus rudis, mih i te reservas? a meo primum toro
et scelere tanto placuit ordiri virum?
iam iam superno numini grat es ago,
quo d icta nostra cecidit Antiope manu,
quo d non ad antra Stygia descendens tibi
matrem reliqui. profugus ignotas procul percurre gentes; te licet terra ultimo summota mundo dirimat Oceani plagis
orbemque nostris pedibus obversum colas, licet in recessu penitus extremo abditus
horrifera cels i regna transieris poli hiemesque supra positus et canas nives gelidi frementes liqueris Boreae minas
post te furentes, sceleribus poenas dabis.
laws and to prostitute the long-chaste body to the crowd. O abominable race, yielding to no laws of a better land! Even the very beasts do shun incestuous love, and instinctive chastity guards Nature's laws. Where are those features, that feigned austerity of the man, that rough garb, aping old-fashioned and archaic ways? Where thy stern manners and the sour severity of age? O two-faced life, thou keepest thy true thoughts hidden and dost clothe soul purpose with an aspect fair—chaste bearing hides unchastity; meekness, effrontery; piety, sin unspeakable; false men approve truth and the soft affect hardihood.

922 O thou lover of the woods, the boasted wild man, continent, rough, unstained, is it for me thou keepst thyself in check? With my couch, by such crime as this, was it thy pleasure to make first test of manhood? Now, now I give thanks to the heavenly powers that Antiope fell stricken by my hand, and that, descending to the Stygian pit, I did not leave to thee thy mother. Fugitive, traverse nations remote, unknown; though a land on the remotest confines of the world hold thee separated by Ocean's tracts, though thou take up thy dwelling in the world opposite our feet, though thou escape to the shuddering realms of the high north and hide deep in its farthest corner, and though, placed beyond the reach of winter and his hoar snows, thou leave behind thee the threatening rage of cold Boreas,

1 i.e. in the Hyperborean regions.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

profugum per omnes pertinax latebras premam; longinqua clausa abstrusa diversa invia emetiemur, nullus obstabit locus—scis unde redeam. tela quo mitti haud queunt, hue vota mittam. genitor aequoreus dedit ut vota prono terna concipiam deo, et invocata munus hoc sanxit Styge.

En perage donum triste, regnator freti! non cernat ultra lucidum Hippolytus diem adeatque manes iuvenis iratos patri. fer abominandum nunc opem nato, parens; numquam supremum numinis munus tui consumeremus, magna ni premerent mala; inter profunda Tartara et Ditem horridum et imminentes regis inferni minas, voto peperci. redde nunc pactam fidem. genitor, moraris? cur adhuc undae silent? nunc atra ventis nubila impellentibus subtexe noctem, sidera et caelum eripe, effunde pontum, vulgus aequoreum cie fluctusque ab ipso tumidus¹ Oceano voca.

CHORVS

O magna parens, Natura, deum tuque igniferi rector Olympi, qui sparsa cito sidera mundo cursusque vagos rapis astrorum celerique polos cardine versas,

¹ So Leo: Et tumidos.
HIPPOLYTUS

still shalt thou pay penalty for thy crime. Fugitive, through all thy hiding-places untiringly will I pursue thee; regions remote, blocked, hidden away, far separate, trackless, will I traverse, and no place shall stop me—thou knowest whence I am returned. Whither weapons cannot be hurled, thither will I hurl my prayers. My father of the sea granted me thrice to fashion prayers whereto the god would bow, and, calling upon Styx, confirmed the boon.

[To Neptune.]

945 Now fulfil the sad boon, O ruler of the sea! Let Hippolytus see the bright day no more, and in youth pass to the ghosts that are wrathful with his sire. Now bring aid, which my soul abhors, O father, to thy son; never should I squander this last boon of thine, did not great ills o’erwhelm; in depths of Tartarus, in presence of dread Dis, and imminent menace of hell’s lord, I was sparing of this prayer. Keep now thy promised faith. Father, dost thou delay? Why are thy waves yet silent? Now veil the night with dark clouds driven by the winds; snatch stars and sky from sight; pour forth the deep; and, rising high, summon the floods from Ocean’s self.

CHORUS

O Nature, mighty mother of the gods, and thou, fire-bearing Olympus’ lord, who through the swift firmament whirlest the scattered stars, and the wandering courses of the planets, who makest the heavens on swift axis turn, why dost thou take such

1 Because a father is asking the death of his son.

2 Theseus has already used two of his wishes, the first when he set out from Troezen to Athens, and the second when he was in the labyrinth.
cur tanta tibi cura perennes
agitare vias aetheris alti,
ut nunc canae frigora brumae
nudent silvas, nunc arbutis redeant umbrae, nunc aestivi colla leonis Cerenem magno
fervore coquant viresque suas
temperet annus?
sed cur idem qui tanta regis,
sub quo vasti pondera mundi
librata suos ducunt orbes,
hominum nimium securus abes,
non sollicitus prodesse bonis,
nocuisse malis?

Res humanas ordine nullo
Fortuna regit sparsitque manu munera caeca, peiora fovens;
vincit sanctos dira libido,
fraus sublimi regnat in aula.
tradere turpi fasces populus gaudet, cosdem colit atque odit.
tristis virtus perversa tulit
praemia recti; castos sequitur mala paupertas vitioque potens regnat adulter.

do vane pudor falsumque decus!

Sed quid citato nuntius properat gradu
rigatque maestis lugubrem vultum genus?

NVNTIVS

O sors acerba et dura, famulatus gravis,
cur me ad nefandum nuntium casus vocat?
HIPPOLYTUS

care to keep perpetual the pathways of the lofty sky, that now the hoar frosts of winter may strip the woods, now to the plantations their umbrage come again, that now in summer the Lion's fervent heat may ripen the grain and the year regulate its powers? But why, again, dost thou, who holdest so wide sway, and by whose hands the ponderous masses of the vast universe are poised and wheel their appointed courses—why dost thou dwell afar, all too indifferent to men, not anxious to bring blessing to the good, and to the evil, bane?

Fate without order rules the affairs of men, scatters her gifts with unseeing hand, fostering the worse; dire lust prevails against pure men, and crime sits regnant in the lofty palace. The rabble rejoice to give government to the vile, paying high honours even where they hate. Warped are the rewards of uprightness sad virtue gains; wretched poverty dogs the pure, and the adulterer, strong in wickedness, reigns supreme. O decency, honour, how empty and how false!

But why does yon messenger haste hither with rapid pace, his sad countenance wet with grieving tears?

[Enter messenger.]

MESSENGER

O lot bitter and hard, O cruel servitude, why calls fate upon me to bear unutterable tidings?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

THESEVS

Ne metue clades fortiter fari asperas; non imparatum pectus aerumnis fero.

NVNTIVS

Vocem dolori lingua luctifico negat.

THESEVS

Proloquere quae sors aggravet quassam domum.

NVNTIVS

Hippolytus, heu me, flebili leto occubat.

THESEVS

Naturn parens obisse iam pridem scio; nunc raptor obiit. mortis effare ordinem.

NVNTIVS

Vt profugus urbem liquit infesto gradu celerem citatis passibus cursum explicans, celso sonipedes ocius subigit ingo et ora frenis domita substrictis ligat. tum multa secum effatus et patrium solum abominatus saepe genitorem ciet acerque habenis lora permissis quatit; cum subito vastum tonuit ex alto mare crevitque in astra. nullus inspirat salo ventus, quieti nulla pars caeli strepit placidumque pelagus propria tempestas agit.
HIPPOLYTUS

THESEUS

Fear not to speak out boldly the disaster, cruel though it be; I bear a heart not unprepared for suffering.

MESSENGER

My tongue refuses utterance to the grief-bringing woe.

THESEUS

Tell what mischance weighs down this shattered house.

MESSENGER

Hippolytus, woe is me, lies in lamentable death.

THESEUS

That his son was dead the sire has long since known; now is the ravisher dead. But tell the manner of his end.

MESSENGER

When with troubled steps he left the city, a fugitive, unfolding his swift way with flying feet, he quickly brought his prancing steeds 'neath the high yoke and curbed their mouths with tight-drawn reins. Then much did he utter, communing with himself, and, cursing his native land, called oft upon his sire, and with loose reins fiercely shook the lash; when suddenly from out the deep the vast sea thundered and starward heaved itself. No wind was blowing on the briny sea, from no quarter of the calm sky came the noise, but a self-born \( { }^1 \) tempest stirred the peaceful deep. Not so violently does the

\( { }^1 \) i.e. the commotion came from within the sea.
non tantus Auster Sicula disturbat freta nec tam furens Ionius exsurgit sinus regnante Coro, saxa cum fluctu tremunt et cana summum spuma Leucaten ferit.
consurgit ingens pontus in vastum aggerem;
tumidumque monstro pelagus in terras ruit.¹

Nec ista ratibus tanta construitur lues;
terris minatur. fluctus haud cursu levi
provolvit; nescio quid onerato sinu gravis unda portat. quae novum tellus caput 1020 ostendit astris? Cyclas exoritur nova?
latuere rupes numen² Epidauri dei et seelere petrae nobiles Scironides et quae duobus terra comprimitur fretis.³

Hace dum stupentes quaerimus,⁴ totum en mare
immugit, omnes undique scopuli astrepunt;
sumnum cacumen rotat expulso sale,
spumat vomitque vicibus alternis aquas
qualis per alta vehitur Oceani freta fluctum refundens ore physeter capax. 1030
inhorruit concussus undarum globus solvitque sese et litori invexit malum mains timore, pontus in terras ruit suumque monstrum sequitur—os quassat tremor.
quis habitus ille corporis vasti fuit!
caerulea taurus colla sublimis gerens
erexit altam fronte viridanti iubam;
stant hispidae aures, orbibus varius color,
et quem feri dominator habuisset gregis et quem sub undis natus—hinc flamam vomunt 1040
oculi, hinc relucent caerula insigne nota;

¹ Leo deletes this line.
² So A: Leo numine.
³ Leo deletes U. 1022–1024.
⁴ querimur A.
HIPPOLYTUS

south wind distress Sicilia's straits, nor so madly does the Ionian sea swell beneath the north-west's tyrrany, when the cliffs tremble under the shock of waves and the white spray smites Leucate's summit.
The mighty deep heaves up into a huge mound, and the sea, swollen with a monstrous birth, rushes to land.

Nor is that vast destruction piled up for ships;
tis the land it threatens. With no light sweep the flood rolls forward; some strange thing in its burdened womb the heavy wave is carrying. What new land shows its head to the stars? Is a new Cyclad rising? The rocks, the sacred seat of the Epidaurian god,¹ were hid, and the cliffs famous for the crime of Sciron, and the land ² which is hemmed in by two seas.

While we in dumb amaze are wondering what this means, behold, the whole sea bellows, and the cliffs on every hand echo back the sound; the highest peak is wet with dashed-up spray; it foams, and then in turn spews back the flood, as when a cavernous whale swims through the deep ways of ocean, spouting back streams of water from his mouth.
Then the great globe of waters shivered, shook and broke, and brought to the shore a thing more terrible than our fear; the sea rushed landward, following its monster. My lips tremble in the telling. How the thing looked! how huge! A bull it was, towering high with a dark blue neck, and he reared a high mane upon his verdant crest; his shaggy ears stood up; his eyes flashed with changing colour, now such as the lord of a wild herd might have, now such as one born beneath the sea—now his eyes dart flame, now they flash wondrous with cerulean gleam. His ¹ These altar-like rocks were sacred to Aesculapius.

² Isthmus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

opima cervix arduos tollit toros
naresque hiulcis haustibus patulae fremunt;
musco tenaci pectus ac palear viret,
longum rubente spargitur fuco latus.
tum pone tergus ultima in monstrum coit facies et ingens belua immensam trahit squamosa partem. talis extremo mari pistrix citatas sorbet aut frangit rates.
tremuere terrae, fugit attonitum pecus
passim per agros nec suos pastor sequi meminit iuvenes; omnis e saltu fera diffugit, omnis frigidus exsanguis metu venator horret. solus immunes metu Hippolytus artis continet frenis equos pavidosque notae vocis hortatu ciet.

Est alta ad agros collibus ruptis via,
vicina tangens spatia suppositi maris;
hic se illa moles acuit atque iras parat.

At cepit animos seque praetemptans satis
prolusit irae, praepeti cursu evolat,
summam citato vix gradu tangens humum,
et torva currus ante trepidantes stetit.
contra feroci natus insurges minax
vultu nec ora mutat et magnum intonat:
"haud frangit animum vanus hic terror meum;
nam mihi paternus vincere est tauros labor."
inobsequentes protinus frenis equi rapuere currum iamque derrantes via,
quacumque rabidos pavidos evexit furor,
hac ire pergunt seque per scopulos agunt

At ille, qualis turbido rector mari ratem retentat, ne det obliquum latus, brawny neck with great muscles bulges and his wide nostrils roar with his gaping draughts of air. His breast and dewlap are green with clinging moss, and his long flanks with red seaweed are spotted. His hinder parts are joined into monstrous shape, and, all scaly, the huge beast drags his measureless length along. Such is that sea-monster of the outer ocean which swallows or crushes swift-flying ships. The lands quaked with fear; herds fled in frenzy in all directions through the fields, and the herdsman forgot to follow his cattle. All beasts fled from their wooded haunts; all hunters stood trembling, pale with chilling fear. Hippolytus alone, quite unafraid, with tight reins holds fast his horses and, terror-stricken though they are, urges them on with the encouragement of his familiar voice.

There is a deep passage towards the fields through the broken hills, hard by the neighbouring stretches of the sea below. Here that huge creature sharpens his anger and prepares his wrath. When he has gained his spirit, and with full trial rehearsed his wrath, he darts forth, running swiftly, scarce touching the surface of the ground with flying feet, and stands, in grim menace, before the trembling steeds. Thy son, rising up, confronts him with fierce, threatening look, nor does he change countenance, but loudly thunders: "This empty terror cannot break my spirit, for 'twas my father's task to conquer bulls." But straightway his horses, disobedient to the reins, seized the chariot and, roaming from the road, wherever frenzied terror carried them in their mad flight, there they plunged along and dashed amid the rocks.

But he, as a helmsman holds his ship steady on the boisterous sea, lest it give its side to the waves, et arte fluctum fallit, haud aliter citos currus gubernat. ora nunc pressis trahit constricta frenis, terga nunc torto frequens verbere cohereet. sequitur adsiduus comes, nunc aequa carpens spatia, nunc contra obvius oberrat, omni parte terrorem movens.

Non licuit ultra fugere, nam toto obvius incurrit ore corniger ponti horridus. tum vero pavida sonipedes mente exciti imperia solvunt seque luctantur iugo eripere rectique in pedes iactant onus. praeceps in ora fusus implicuit cadens laqueo tenaci corpus et quanto magis pugnat, sequaces hoc magis nodos ligat sensere pecudes facinus—et curru levi, dominante nullo, qua timor iussit ruunt. talis per auras non suum agnosccens onus moribunda celeres membra provolvunt rotae; tandemque raptum truncus ambusta sude medium per inguen stipite erecto tenet, paulumque domino currus affixo stetit.

Solique falso creditum indignans diem Phaethonta currus devio excussit polo. late cruientat arva et inlisum caput scopulis resultat; auferunt dumi comas, et ora durus pulchra populatur lapis peritque multo vulnere infelix decor.

haesere biiuges vulnere—et pariter moram dominumque rum punc. inde semanimem secant
HIPPOLYTUS

and skilfully cheats the floods, in like manner guides his swift-moving steeds. Now he drags on their mouths checked by the tight-drawn reins, and now, oft plying the twisted lash, he forces them to his will. His companion holds doggedly in pursuit, now racing alongside the horses, now making detour to face them, from every side filling them with fear. But now they could flee no further; for he charged full front upon them, that bristling, horned monster of the deep. Then, truly, the plunging horses, driven by mad fear, broke from control, struggled to wrench their necks from the yoke, and, rearing up, hurled their burden to the ground. Headlong on his face he plunged and, as he fell, entangled his body in the clinging reins; and the more he struggled, the tighter he drew those firm-holding coils. The horses felt their deed, and now, with the light chariot, since none controlled, wherever fear bade on they dashed. Just so, not recognizing their wonted burden, and indignant that the day had been entrusted to a pretended Sun, the horses flung Phaëthon far from his heavenly track. Far and wide the fields are stained with blood, and his head, dashed on the rocks, bounds back from them. The brambles pluck away his hair; the hard stones ravage that lovely face, and his ill-fated beauty is ruined by many a wound. The swift wheels drag his dying limbs; and at last, as he is whirled along, a tree, its trunk charred into a stake, stays him with its stock driven right through the groin and holds him fast, and for a little while the car stands still, held by its impaled master. Awhile that wound stays the team—then equally delay and their master, too, they break. Thereafter the thickets slash his

1 The monster.
2 i.e. of the Sun.
3 A bold case of zeugma.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

virgulta, acutis asperi vepres rubis
omnisque truncus corporis partem tuit.
errant per agros funebres famuli manus,
per illa qua distractus Hippolytus loca
longum cruenta tramitem signat nota, maestaeque domini membra vestigant canes.
necdum dolentum sedulus potuit labor
explere corpus. hocine est formae decus?
qui modo paterni clarus imperii comes et certus heres siderum fulsit modo, passim ad supremos ille colligitur rogos
et funeri conferitur.

THESEVS

O nimium potens,
quanto parentes sanguinis vinclo tenes,
natura, quam te colimus inviti quoque.
occidere volui noxium, amissum fleo.

NVNTIVS

Haud fere honeste quisquam quod voluit potest.¹

THESEVS

Equidem malorum maximum hunc cumulum reor,
si abominanda casus optanda efficiet.

NVNTIVS

Et si odia servas, cur madent fletu genae?

THESEVS

Quod interem, non quod amisi fleo.

¹ So A: Haud odere non est quisque quod voluit potens E: Leo corrects, followed by Richter, Gaudere non est ipse quod voluit potens.
HIPPOLYTUS

half-dead body, the rough brambles with their sharp thorns tear him, and every tree-trunk has taken its toll of him. Now bands of his mourning servants are scouring the fields through the places where Hippolytus was dragged, marked in a long trail by bloody traces, and his whimpering dogs are tracking their master's limbs. But not yet has the pains-taking toil of his grieving friends availed to fill out his body. Has his glorious beauty come to this? He who but now was the illustrious partner of his father's throne, who but now, his acknowledged heir, shone like the stars, he is being gathered from every hand for his last burning, and collected for his funeral pyre.

THESEUS [weeping]

O nature, all too potent, with how strong ties of blood dost thou hold parents! how we cherish thee, even against our wills! Guilty, I wished him dead; lost, I lament him.

MESSENGER

Not rightfully may any weep what he has willed.

THESEUS

Truly I deem this the crowning woe of woes, if fortune makes what we must loathe that we must long for.

MESSENGER

If thou still keepst thy hate, why are thy cheeks wet with tears?

THESEUS

Not that I lost, but that I slew, I weep.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

CHORVS

Quanti casus humana rotant!
minor in parvis Fortuna furit
leviusque ferit leviora deus;
servat placidos obscura quies
praebetque senes casa seuros.

Admota aetheriis culmina sedibus
Euros excipiunt, excipiunt Notos, insani Boreae minas,
imbriferumque Corum,
raros patitur fulminis ictus
umida vallis;
tremuit telo Iovis altisoni Caucasus ingens Phrygiumque nemus matris Cybeles. metuens caelo Iuppiter alto vicina petit;
non capit unquam magnos motus
humilis tecti plebeia domus.
circa regna tonat.1

Volat ambiguibus mobilis alis hora, nec ulli praestat velox Fortuna fidem.
hic qui clari laetus vidit2
sidera mundi nitidumque diem nocte relict, luget maestos tristis reditus ipsoque magis flebile Averno sedis patriae videt hospitium.

Pallas Actaeae veneranda genti, quod tuus caelum superosque Theseus
spectat et fugit Stygias paludes, casta, nil debes patruo rapaci;
constat inferno numerus tyranno.

1 Leo deletes this line. 2 Leo supplies laetus vidit.
HIPPOLYTUS

CHORUS

How chance whirls round the affairs of men! Less does fortune rage midst humble folk, and more lightly God smites the more lightly blessed. Unnoticed ease keeps men in peace and a cottage bestows age untroubled.

1128 The mountain-peaks, lifted to airy heights, catch east, catch south winds, mad Boreas’ threats, and the rain-fraught north-west gale. Seldom does the moist valley suffer the lightning’s blast; but Caucasus the huge, and the Phrygian grove of mother Cybele, quake beneath the bolt of high-thundering Jove. For in jealous fear Jove aims at that which neighbours on high heaven; but the low-roofed, common home ne’er feels his mighty blasts. Around thrones he thunders.

1141 On doubtful wings flies the inconstant hour, nor does swift Fortune pledge loyalty to any. He who with joy beheld the clear, starry skies and bright day, the night now left behind, in grief is lamenting his sorrowful return, and finds his welcome to his father’s dwelling more doleful than Avernus’ self.

1149 O Pallas, ever to be revered by the Athenian race, for that thy Theseus looks on sky and upper world and has escaped from the pools of Styx, chaste one, thou owest naught to thine uncle, the all-devouring; unchanged the tale remains for the infernal king.

1 Theseus, who has but now returned from Hades.
2 i.e. the darkness of the lower world.
3 i.e. if Theseus has escaped Pluto, Hippolytus has gone to fill his place.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE
Quae vox ab altis flebilis tectis sonat
strictoque vaecors Phaedra quid ferro parat?

THESEVS
Quis te dolore percitam instigat furor?
quid ensis iste quidve vociferatio
planctusque supra corpus invisum volunt?

PHAEDRA
Me, me, profundi saeve dominator freti, invade et in me monstra caerulei maris
emitte, quidquid intimo Tethys sinu extrema gestat, quidquid Oceanus vagis complexus undis ultimo fluctu tegit.
o dure Theseu semper, o numquam ad tuos
tuto reverse, natus et genitor nece reditus tuos luere; pervertis domum amore semper coniugum aut odio nocens.
Hippolyte, tales intuor vultus tuos
talesque feci? membra quis saevus Sinis aut quis Procrustes sparsit aut quis Cresius, Daedalea vasto claustra mugitu replens,
taurus biformis ore cornigero ferox
divulsit? heu me, quo tuus fugit decor
oculique nostrum sidus? examinis iaces?
What voice of wailing sounds from the high palace? And what would maddened Phaedra with the naked sword?

[Enter Phaedra with a drawn sword in her hand.]

Theseus

What fury pricks thee on, wild with grief? Why that sword? What mean thine outcries and lamentations over the hated corpse?

Phaedra

Me, me, assault, O savage ruler of ocean’s depths; against me send forth the blue sea’s monsters, what-e’er in her inmost womb farthest Tethys bears, what-e’er in his restless waves’ embrace Ocean hides in his remotest flood. O Theseus, always harsh, who never without harm unto thy loved ones dost come back, son and father have paid for thy homecomings by their death. Thou art the destroyer of thy home, hurtful ever, whether through love or hatred of thy wives.

[Turning to the mangled corpse.]

O Hippolytus, is it such I see thy face? such have I made it? What savage Sinis, what Procrustes, has scattered thy members so, or what Cretan bull, fierce, two-formed monster, filling the labyrinth of Daedalus with his huge bellowings, has torn thee asunder with his horns? Ah, woe is me! whither is thy glorious beauty fled, and thine eyes, my stars? Dost lie low in death? Come back for

1 See Index s.v. “Theseus.”
2 Theseus had slain Antiope in a fit of anger, and now has destroyed Hippolytus through jealous love for Phaedra.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ades parumper verbaque exaudi mea—
nil turpe loquimur—hac manu poenas tibi solvam et nefando pectori ferrum inseram animaque Phaedram pariter ac scelere exuam,
et te per undas perque Tartareos lacus,
per Styga, per amnes igneos amens sequar. 1180
placemus umbras; capitis exuvias cape laceraeque frontis accipe abscissam † comam.
non licuit animos iungere, et certe licet iunxisse fata.

Morere, si casta es, viro;
si incesta, amori. coniugis thalamos petam
tanto impiatos facinore? hoc derat nefas, ut vindicato sancta fruereris toro.
o mors amoris una sedamen mali,
o mors pudoris maximum laesi decus,
confugimus ad te; pande placatos sinus. 1190

Audite, Athenae, tuque, funesta pater peior noverca: falsa memoravi et nefas, quod ipsa demens pectore insano hauseram,
mentita finxi. vana punisti pater, iuvenisque castus crimine incesto iacet,
pudicus, insons.

Recipe iam mores tuos.
mucrone pectus impium iusto patet
cruorque sancto solvit inferias viro.

Quid facere rapto debeas nato parens,
disce a noverca: condere Acherontis plagis.² 1200

† So §: Leo abscisam.
² Leo gives ll. 1199, 1200 to Theseus; but they seem more naturally to belong to Phaedra. So A.

414
HIPPOLYTUS

a little and hearken to my words—no shameful thing I speak—with this hand will I make amends to thee, in my wicked heart will I thrust the sword and set Phaedra free equally from life and crime. Then through waters, through Tartarean pools, through Styx, through rivers of fire will I madly follow thee. Let me appease thy shade; take the spoils of my head, and accept this lock torn from my wounded forehead. It was not ours to be joined in life, but surely 'tis ours to be joined in death.

[To herself.]

1184 Now die, if thou art pure, for thy husband’s sake; if impure, for thy love. Shall I seek again my husband’s couch by so great crime defiled? The one horror lacking was that, as if pure, thou shouldst enjoy his couch claimed as thy right. O death, thou only solace of evil love, O death, thou chiefest grace to damaged honour, I fly to thee; spread wide thy forgiving arms.

1191 Hear me, O Athens, and thou, his father, worse than baleful stepdame: I have lied to you, and the crime which, crazed with passion, I had conceived in my own mad breast, I falsely charged to him. Thou, father, hast punished to no purpose; and the chaste youth, through charge of the unchaste, lies there, all pure and innocent.

[To HIPPOLYTUS.]

1196 Recover now thine honour. My impious breast is bare to the sword of justice, and my blood makes atonement to a guiltless man.

[To THESEUS.]

1199 What thou, his father, shouldst do, now that thy son is murdered, learn from his stepdame: hide thee in Acheron.

[She falls upon her sword and dies.]
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

THESEVS

Pallidi fauces Averni vosque, Taenarei specus, unda miseris grata Leethes vosque, torpentes lacus, impium abdite atque mersum premite perpetuis malis.
nunc adeste, saeva ponti monstra, nunc vastum mare, ultimo quodcumque Proteus aequorum abscondit sinu, meque ovantem scelere tanto rapite in altos gurgites.
tuque semper, genitor, irae faciles assessor meae, morte facili dignus haud sum qui nova natum nece segregetem sparsi per agros quique, dum falsum nefas exsequor vindex severus, incidi in verum scelus. 1210 sidera et manes et undas scelere complevi meo;
amplius sors nulla restat; regna me norunt tria.

In hoc redimus? patuit ad caelum via, bina ut viderem funera et geminam necem, caelebs et orbus funebres una face ut concremarem prolis ac thalami rogos?
donator atrae lucis, Alcide, tuum Diti remitte munus; ereptos mihi restitue manes. impius frustra invoco mortem relictam. crudus et leti artifex, 1220 exitia machinatus insolita efferat, nunc ipse tibimet iusta supplicia irroga. pinus coacto vertice attingens humum caelo remissum findat in geminas trabes,
HIPPOLYTUS

THESEUS

Ye jaws of wan Avernus, ye Taenarean caves, ye waves of Lethe, welcome to the wretched, ye sluggish pools, hide ye my impious self, plunge deep and bury me in unending woes. Come now, savage monsters of the deep, now, vast sea, and whatever Proteus has hidden away in the furthest hollow of his waters, and hurry me off, me who felt triumph in crime so great, to your deep pools. And thou, father, who didst e'er give too quick assent to my angry prayer, I am not worthy of an easy death who have brought unheard-of destruction on my son and scattered his mangled limbs throughout the fields; who, while, as stern avenger, I was punishing an unreal crime, have myself fallen into true guilt. Heaven, hell, and ocean have I filled up by my sin; there remains no further lot; 1 three kingdoms know me.

1213 For this have I returned? Was the way opened to the light of heaven that I might look on two funerals and a double murder, that, wiseless and childless, I might with one torch light the funeral pyres of son and wife? O giver of light that is but darkness, Alcides, give back his boon 2 to Dis; give me up again to the ghosts whom I escaped. Impiously, I make vain prayers for the death I left behind. Thou bloody man, skilful in deadly arts, who didst contrive unheard-of, barbarous ways of death, now upon thyself inflict fitting punishment. Shall a pine-tree, its top bent down to earth, split me in two, shot back into the air? 3 Shall I be

1 A reference to the three lots by which the sons of Saturn divided the universe among themselves.
2 Hercules had asked the boon of Dis that he might take Theseus with him out of Hades.
3 See Index s.v. "Sinis."
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

mittarve praeceps saxa per Scironia?
graviora vidi, quae pati clausos iubet Phlegethon nocentes igneo cingens vado;
quae poena memet maneant et sedes, scio.

Umbrae nocentes, cedite et cervicibus
his, his repositum degravet fessas manus saxum, seni perennis Aeolio labor;
me ludat amnis ora vicina alluens;
vultur relictus transvolet Tityo ferus
meumque poenae semper accrescat iecur;
et tu mei requiesce Perithoï pater:
haec incitatis membra turbinibus ferat
numquam resistens orbe revoluto rota.
dehisce tellus, recipe me dirum chaos,
recipe, haec ad umbras iustior nobis via est—
natum sequor. ne metue qui manes regis;
casti venimus; recipe me aeterna domo
non exiturum. non movent divos preces;
at si rogarem scelera, quam proni forent!

CHORVS

Theseu, querelis tempus aeternum manet.
nunc iusta nato solve et absconde ocius
dispersa foede membra laniatu effero.

THESEVS

Huc, huc reliquias vehite cari corporis
pondusque et artus temere congestos date.
Hippolytus hic est? crimen agnosco meum;

418
HIPPOLYTUS

hurled headlong over the Scironian cliffs? More dreadful things have I seen which Phlegethon bids imprisoned sinners suffer, compassing them about with his stream of fire; what punishment waits for me, and what place, I know.

Ye guilty shades, make room, and on these shoulders, these, let the rock rest, the endless task of the aged son of Aeolus, and weigh down my weary hands; let water, lapping my very lips, mock my thirst; let the fell vulture leave Tityus and fly hither, let my liver constantly grow afresh for punishment; and do thou rest awhile, father of my Pirithoüs—let the wheel that never stops its whirling bear these limbs of mine on its swift-turning rim. Yawn, earth; take me, dire Chaos, take me; this way to the shades is more fitting for me—my son I follow. And fear not, thou who rulest the shades; I come clean-handed; receive me into thy everlasting home, to go forth no more.
My prayers move not the gods; but if I asked impious things, how would they bend to answer!

CHORUS

Theseus, time without end awaits thy lamentations. Now pay the rites due to thy son and bury with speed the scattered limbs mangled so shamefully.

THESEUS

Hither, hither bring the remains of his dear body and heap together, as they come, the burden of his limbs. Is this Hippolytus? Mine is the sin, I do

1 Sisyphus. 2 Referring to the torture of Tantalus.
3 Ixion. 4 i.e. than his former journey to the lower world.
5 i.e. with no evil designs on Proserpina, as before.
ego te peremi, neu nocens tantum semel solusve fierem, facinus ausurus parens
patrem advocavi, munere en patrio fruor.
o triste fractis orbitas annis malum!
complectere artus, quodque de nato est super,
miserande, maesto pectore incumbens fove.

CHORVS

Disiecta, genitor, membra laceri corporis
in ordinem dispone et errantes loco restitue partes. fortis hic dextrae locus, hic laeva frenis docta moderandis manus
ponenda; laevi lateris agnosco notas.
quam magna lacrimis pars adhuc nostris abest!

THESEVS

Durate trepidae lugubri officio manus,
fletusque largos sistite, arentes genae,
dum membra nato genitor adnumerat suo corpusque fingit. hoc quid est forma carens et turpe, multo vulnere abruptum undique?
quae pars tui sit dubito; sed pars est tui.
hic, hic repone, non suo, at vacuo loco.
haecne illa facies igne sidereo nitens,
inimica flectens lumina? huc cecidit decor?
o dira fata, numinum o saevus favor'
sie ad parentem natus ex voto redit?
En haec suprema dona genitoris cape,
saepe efferendus; interim haec ignes ferant.

1250
1260
1270
420
HIPPOLYTUS

acknowledge it; 'tis I who have murdered thee, and, lest once only or alone I might be guilty, when I his father would dare crime, my own sire I summoned to my aid. Behold, I enjoy my father’s boon. O childlessness, bitter misfortune for broken years! Come, clasp his limbs and all that is left thee of thy son, thou wretched man, and, in thy sad breast fondling, cherish them.

CHORUS

The scattered parts of his torn body set thou, his sire, in order, and put back in place the random pieces. Here should be his strong right hand, here we must put his left, skilled in managing the reins; traces of his left side I recognize. But how large a part is still lacking to our tears!

THESEUS

Be firm, my trembling hands, for your sad duty; be dry, my cheeks, stay your flowing tears, while a father is portioning out members to his son and fashioning his body. What is this shapeless, ugly piece, with many a wound torn on every side? What part it is of thee, I know not; but it is a part of thee. Here, here lay it down, not in its own but in an empty place. Is this that face which once gleamed with fire as of the stars, which turned his enemy’s eyes aside? Has his beauty fallen to this? O dire fate, O cruel favour of the gods! Thus comes back son to father in answer to his prayer?

[Placing some ornaments on the torn body.]

Lo, these are thy sire’s last gifts. Take them, O thou who must oft be borne to burial. Now let the fires consume these limbs.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Patefacite acerbam caede funesta domum;
Mopsopia claris tota lamentis sonet.
vos apparete regii flammam rogi;
at vos per agros corporis partes vagas
inquirite.

Istam terra défossam premat,
gravisque tellus impio capiti incubet!

1280
HIPPOLYTUS

[To attendants.]

1275 Open wide my palace, gloomy and foul with slaughter, and let all Athens with loud laments resound. Do you make ready the flames of the royal pyre; do you seek through the fields for his body’s parts still wandering.

[Pointing to Phaedra’s corpse.]

1279 As for her, let her be buried deep in earth, and heavy may the soil lie on her unholy head!
RECOMMENDED READING

Oedipus Rex

by Sophocles

translated by F. J. Honeyman

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

Oedipus, king of Thebes; the son, as he supposed, of Polybus, king of Corinth, and Merope, his wife, but found to be the son of Laius and Jocasta.

Jocasta, wife of Oedipus, found to be also his mother.

Creon, a Theban prince, brother of Jocasta.

Tiresias, the prophet of Thebes, now old and blind.

Manto, daughter of Tiresias.

Old Man, sent from Corinth to announce to Oedipus the death of Polybus.

Phorbas, shepherd in charge of the royal flocks of Thebes.

Messenger, who announces the self-inflicted blindness of Oedipus and the suicide of Jocasta.

Chorus of Theban elders.

The Scene is laid before the royal palace of Thebes; the play opens in the early morning of the day within which the tragedy is consummated.
ARGUMENT

An oracle once came to Laius, king of Thebes, that he should perish by his own son's hands. When, therefore, a son was born to him, he gave the infant to his chief shepherd to expose on Mount Cithaeron. But the tender-hearted rustic gave the babe instead to a wandering herdsman of Polybus, the king of Corinth.

Years later a reputed son of Polybus, Oedipus by name, fearing an oracle which doomed him to slay his father and wed his mother, fled from Corinth, that so he might escape this dreadful fate. As he fared northward he met and slew an old man who imperiously disputed the narrow way with him. Upon arriving at the Theban land he read the riddle of the Sphinx, and so destroyed that monster which Juno had sent to harass the land which she hated; and for this service Oedipus was made the husband of Jocasta, the widowed queen of Laius (recently slain, so said report, by a band of robbers, on the high road), and set upon the vacant throne.

Now other years have passed, and sons and daughters have been born to the royal pair. But now a dreadful pestilence afflicts the State. Oedipus has sent Creon to consult the oracle, to learn the cause and seek the means of deliverance from the scourge. And while he waits his messenger's return the murky dawn still finds him grieving for his kingdom's wretched plight.
Iam nocte Titan dubius expulsa redit et nube maestus\(^1\) squalida exoritur iubar, lumenque flamma triste luctifica gerens prospiciet avida peste solatas domos, stragemque quam nox fecit ostendet dies.

Quisquamne regno gaudet? O fallax bonum, quantum malorum fronte quam blandà tegís! ut alta ventos semper excipiunt iuga rupemque saxis vasta dirimentem freta quamvis quieti verberat fluctus maris, imperia sic excelsa Fortunae obiaceint.

quam bene parentis sceptra Polybi fugeram curis solutus exul, intrepidus, vagans\(^2\) (caelum deosque testor) in regnum incidi. infaunda timeo—ne mea genitor manu perimatur. hoc me Delphicae laurus monent, aliudque nobis maius indicunt scelus. est maius aliquod patre mactato nefas? pro misera pietas (eloqui fatum pudet), thalamos parentis Phoebus et diros toros nato minatur impia incestos face; hic me paternis expulit regnis timor.

\(^1\) So Leo and Richter: Bentley maestum squalida extollit iubar.

\(^2\) So Richter, with A: Leo vacans, with E.
Now night is driven away; the hesitant sun returns, and rises, sadly veiling his beams in murky cloud; with woeful flame he brings a light of gloom and will look forth upon our homes stricken with ravening plague, and day will reveal the havoc which night has wrought.

6 Does any man rejoice in royalty? O deceitful good, how many ills dost hide beneath thy smiling face! As lofty peaks do ever catch the blasts, and as the cliff, which with its jutting rocks cleaves the vast deep, is beaten by the waves of even a quiet sea, so does exalted empire lie exposed to fate. How happily had I escaped the sceptre of my father, Polybus! An exile freed from cares,¹ fearless, wandering, upon a kingdom (be heaven and the gods my witness) I came by chance. Things unspeakable I fear—that by my hand my father shall be slain. Of this the Delphic laurels warn me, and another, still greater crime they assign to me. Is any wickedness greater than a murdered sire? O hapless filial love!—I am ashamed to tell my doom—Phoebus threatens the son with his father's chamber, with bed made infamous, defiled by unhallowed passion. 'Twas the fear of this that drove me from my father's realm.

¹ i.e. regarding the oracle, whose fulfilment he thought he had escaped.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

non ego penates profugus excessi meos;
parum ipse fidens mihimet in tuto tua, Natura, posui iura. cum magna horreas,
quod posse fieri non putes metuas tamen.
cuncta expavesco meque non credo mihi.

Iam iam aliquid in nos fata moliri parant;
nam quid rear quod ista Cadmeae lues
in'esta genti, strage tam late edita, mihi parcit uni? cui reservamur malo?
inter ruinas urbis et semper novis
deflenda lacrimis funera ac populi struem incolumis asto—scilicet l'hoebi reus.
sperare poteras sceleribus tantis dari
regnum salubre? fecimus caelum nocens.

Non aura gelido lenis afflatu sovet
anhela flammis corda, non Zephyri leves
spirant, sed ignes auget aestiferi canis Titan, leonis terga Nemeaei premens.
deseruit amnes umor atque herbas color,
aretque Dirce, tenuis Ismenos fluit et tinguit inopi nuda vix unda vada.
obscura caelo labitur Phoebi soror,
tristisque mundus nubilo pallet die.
nullum serenis noctibus sidus micat,
sed gravis et ater incubat terris vapor.
obtexit arces caelitum ac summas domos
inferna facies. denegat fructum Ceres

430
OEDIPUS

Not as a fugitive¹ did I leave my home; of my own will, distrustful of myself, O Nature, I made thy laws secure. When thou dreadest some great calamity, though thou thinkst it cannot befall, still do thou fear. I dread all things exceedingly, and I do not trust myself unto myself.

²³ Now, even now the fates are aiming some blow at me; for what am I to think when this pestilence, so deadly to Cadmus' race, so widespread in its destruction, spares me alone? For what evil am I reserved? Midst the ruins of my city, midst funerals to be lamented with tears ever fresh, midst the slaughter of a nation, I stand unscathed—aye! prisoner at Phoebus' bar. Couldst thou hope that to crimes like thine a wholesome kingdom would be granted? I have made heaven pestilent.²

³²⁇ No soft breeze with its cool breath relieves our breasts that pant with heat, no gentle Zephyrs blow; but Titan augments the scorching dog-star's fires, close-pressing upon the Nemean Lion's³ back. Water has fled the streams, and from the herbage verdure. Dirce is dry, scant flows Ismenus' stream, and with its meagre wave scarce wets the naked sands. With paling light glides Phoebus' sister athwart the sky, and the gloomy heavens are wan in the lowering day. No star in clear nights glitters, but a heavy, black fog broods o'er the lands. The citadels of the heavenly gods and their homes on high are veiled in hellish aspect. The ripened corn withholds its fruitful

¹ i.e. to avoid the consequences of some crime already committed.
² i.e. "I have caused the gods on my account to work this great destruction"; or, as Farnabius interprets: "I have infected the very air." This latter interpretation is favoured by l. 79.
³ The sun is in the constellation of Leo in July.
adulta, et altis flava cum spicis tremat, 50
arente culmo sterilis emoritur seges.
nec ulla pars immunis exitio vacat,
sed omnis aetas pariter et sexus ruit,
juvenesque senibus iungit et natis patres
funesta pestis, una fax thalamos cremat fletuque acerbo funera et questu carent.
quin ipsa tanti pervicax clades mali siccavit oculos, quodque in extremis solet periere lacrimae. portat hunc aeger parens supremum ad ignem, mater hunc amens gerit properatque ut alium repetat in eundem rogum.
quin luctu in ipso luctus exoritur novus
suaeque circa funus exequiae cadunt.
tum propria flammis corpora alienis cremant;
diripitur ignis; nullus est miseris pudor.
non ossa tumuli sancta discreti tegunt.
arsisse satis est; pars quota in cineres abit!
dest terra tumulis, iam rogos silvae negant.
non vota, non ars ulla correptos levant.
cadunt medentes, morbus auxilium trahit.
70

Adfusus aris supplices tendo manus matura poscens fata, praecurram ut prior patriam ruentem neve post omnes cadam fiamque regni funus extremum mei.
o saeva nimium numina, o fatum grave!
negatur uni nempe in hoc populo mihi
mors tam parata? sperne letali manu contacta regna, linque lacrimas, funera, harvest, and though the golden crop waves high its wheaten ears, the grain dies shrivelled on its parched stalk. No class is free from death; but every age and sex is smitten alike. Young men with old, fathers with sons, are joined by the deadly plague; husband and wife by a single fire are burned, and funerals lack bitter tears and lamentations. Nay, the persistent bane of our so great a woe hath of itself dried our eyes and, as oft in utmost misery, our tears have perished. Here to the final flames a stricken father bears his son; there a crazed mother carries her child and hastens back to bring another to the selfsame pyre. Nay more, in their very grief new grief arises and midst funeral rites their own rites befall. Anon, with others’ fires they burn the bodies of their own; yes, fire is stolen, for the wretched have no shame. No separate mounds cover the hallowed bones. Mere burning is enough; how small a part is turned to ashes! No ground is left for tombs; now woods refuse more pyres. Neither prayers nor any skill avails the stricken. Healers fall victims; the disease drags down those who seek to aid.

71 Prostrate at the altars, I stretch suppliant hands, begging my fates to hasten, that I may anticipate my country’s ruin and not fall after all the rest, and mine become the last funeral of my realm. Oh, divinities too harsh, Oh, heavy fate! To me alone in all this people is death denied, so ready for all others? Come, fly the land thy baleful hand has tainted, leave the tears, the deaths, the pest-laden air which
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Tabifica caeli vitia quae tecum invehis
infaustus hospes, profuge iamdudum oius— vel ad parentes!

IOCASTA

Quid iuvat, coniunx, mala
gravare questu? regium hoc ipsum reor— adversa capere, quoque sit dubius magis status et cadentis imperi moles labet, hoc stare certo pressius fortem gradu.
haud est virile terga Fortunae dare.

OEDIPVS

Abest pavoris crimen ac probrum procul,
virtusque nostra nescit ignavos metus.
si tela contra stricta, si vis horrida Mavortis in me rueret, adversus feros
audax Gigantas obvias ferrem manus.
nec Sphinx caecis verba nectentem modis fugi; cruentos vatis infandae tuli rictus et albens ossibus sparsis solum;
cumque e superna rupe iam praedae imminens aptaret alas verbera et caudae movens saevi leonis more conciperet minas, carmen poposci. sonuit horrendum insuper, crepuere malae, saxaque impatiens morae
revulsit unguis visceras expectans mea;
nodosa sortis verba et implexos dolos ac triste carmen alitis solvi ferae.
OEDIPUS

thou bringst with thee, ill-omened guest; fly quickly! (long since 'twere well)—even to thy parents! ¹

JOCASTA

[Who has entered in time to hear her husband's last words.]

What boots it, husband, to make woe heavier by lamentation? This very thing, methinks, is regal—to face adversity and, the more dubious thy station and the more the greatness of empire totters to its fall, the more firm to stand, brave with un-faltering foot. 'Tis not a manly thing to turn the back to Fortune.

OEDIPUS

Far from me is the crime and shame of cowardice, and my valour knows not dastard fears. Should swords be drawn against me, should the bristling power of Mars rush on me, against even the fierce Giants would I boldly bear opposing hands. The Sphinx, weaving her words in darkling measures, I fled not; I faced the bloody jaws of the fell prophetess and the ground white with scattered bones. And when from a lofty cliff, already hovering over her prey, she prepared her pinions and, lashing her tail like a savage lion, stirred up her threatening wrath, I asked her riddle. Thereupon came a sound of dread; her jaws crashed, and her talons, brooking no delay, eager for my vitals, tore at the rocks. The lot's intricate, guile-entangled words, the grim riddle of the winged beast, I solved.

¹ i.e. Polybus, king of Corinth, and Merope, his wife, who, he supposed, were his parents and from whom he had fled to Thebes.
Quid sera mortis vota nunc demens facis? licuit perire. laudis hoc pretium tibi sceptrum et peremptae Sphinxis haec merces datur. ille, ille dirus callidi monstri cinis in nos rebellat, illa nunc Thebas lues perempta perdit. una iam superest salus, si quam salutis Phoebus ostendit viam.

CHORVS

Occidis, Cadmi generosa proles, urbe cum tota; viduas colonis respicis terras, miseranda Thebe. carpitur leto tuus ille, Bacche, miles, extremos comes usque ad Indos, ausus Eois equitare campis figere et mundo tua signa primo. cinnami silvis Arabas beatos vidit et versos equites, sagittis terga fallacis metuenda Parthi; litus intravit pelagi rubentis; promit hinc ortus aperitque lucem Phoebus et flamma propiore nudos inscit Indos.

Stirpis invictae genus interimus, labimur saevo rapiente fato; ducitur semper nova pompa Morti; longus ad manes properatur ordo agminis maesti, seriesque tristis haeret et turbae tumulos petenti non satis septem patuere portae. stat gravis strages premiturque iuncto funere funus.

1 Richter assigns ll. 103–105 to Jocasta.
OEDIPUS

103 [To himself.] Why too late dost thou now in madness pray for death? Thou hadst thy chance to die. This sceptre is thy meed of praise, this thy reward for the Sphinx destroyed. That dust, that cursed dust of the artful monster is warring against me still; that pest which I destroyed is now destroying Thebes. One only salvation is left us now, if any way of salvation Phoebus shows.

CHORUS

Thou art falling, O noble race of Cadmus, with all thy city. Reft of its tillers thou seest thy land, O pitiable Thebes. Destruction feeds, O Bacchus, on that soldiery of thine, thy comrades to farthest Ind, who dared to ride on the Eastern plains and plant thy banners on the world's first edge. The Arabs, blest with their cinnamon groves, they saw, and fleeing horsemen, the backs of the treacherous Parthians,1 to be feared for their flying shafts; they pierced to the shores of the ruddy sea,2 whence Phoebus discloses his rising beams, opens the gates of day, and with nearer torch darkens the naked Indians.

124 We, the offspring of an unconquered stock, are perishing, are falling 'neath the fierce onslaught of fate. Each hour a new train moves on to Death; the long array of a mournful band hastes to the shades; the gloomy procession jams, and for the throng that seeks burial the seven gates spread not wide enough. The grievous wrack of carnage halts and funeral crowds funeral in unbroken line.

1 A reference to the proverbial "Parthian shot," delivered while in flight or seeming flight.
SENCAE TRAGOEDIAE

Prima vis tardas tetigit bidentes;
laniger pingues male carpsit herbas.
colla tacturus steterat sacerdos;
dum manus certum parat alta vulner,
aureo taurus rutilante cornu
labitur segnis. patuit sub ictu ponderis vasti resoluta cervix;
neceurus, ferrum maculavit atra
turpis e plaga sanies profusa.
segnior cursu sonipes in ipso concidit gyro dominumque prono prodidit armo.

Incubant agris pecudes relictae;
taurus armento pereunte marcet;
deficit pastor grege deminuto
tabidos inter moriens iuvencos.
non lupos cervi metuunt rapaces,
cessat irati fremitus leonis,
nulla villosis feritas in ursis;
perdidit pestem latebrosa serpens;
are et sicco moritur veneno.

Non silia sua decorata coma fundit opacis montibus umbras,
non rura virent ubere glebae,
non plena suo vitis Baccho
brachchia curvat;
omnia nostrum sensere malum.
Rupere Erebi claustra profundi
turba sororum face Tartarea Phlegethonque suam mutat ripam;
miscuit undis Styga Sidoniis.
First the plague struck the slow-moving sheep; to their bane did the woolly flock crop the rich herbage. Ready to smite his victim's neck, the priest had taken his stand; while his upraised hand aimed the unerring blow, the bull, his horn glimmering with gold, sank dully down. Shattered by the blow of a heavy axe, the neck yawned open; but no blood, only foul gore, oozing from the dark wound, stained the steel. The prancing steed, slowing in mid-course, fell down and flung his rider over his sinking shoulder.

The abandoned cattle lie stricken in the fields; the bull pines away amidst his dying kine. The herdsman deserts his dwindling herd, midst his wasting bullocks dying. No more do stags fear ravenous wolves; subsides the mad lion's roar; no fierceness now among the shaggy bears. The lurking serpent has lost its bane; parched and dying he lies, his venom dried.

No more do the woods, crowned with their own foliage, shed dusky shadows on the mountain-sides; the fields no more grow green with fertile glebe, no more do the vine's full branches bend 'neath the load of its own deity; all things have felt our plague.

They have burst the bars of abysmal Erebus, the throng of sisters with Tartarean torch, and Phlegethon, changing his own course, has mingled Styx with our Sidonian streams. Dark Death opens

---

1 The experience with two victims is described. The first bull fell before he was struck; the second was struck with the axe, but no blood flowed.

2 In reference to the hot fever of the plague-smit victims. Phlegethon was the burning stream of Hades.

3 i.e. Phoenician. Cadmus, son of Agenor, king of Phoenicia had founded Thebes.
Mors atra avidos oris hiatus pandit et omnes explicat alas;
quique capaci turbida cumba
flumina servat durus senio
navita crudo, vix assiduo
bracchia conto lassata refert,
fessus turbam vectare novam.
quin Taenarii vincula ferri
rupisse canem fama et nostris errare locis, mugisse solum, vaga per lucos simulacra ferunt
maiora viris, bis Cadmeum nive discussa tremuisse nemus,
bis turbatam sanguine Dirce,
nocte silenti
Amphionios ululasse canes.
    O dira novi facies leti,
gravior leto! piger ignavos
alligat artus languor, et aegro rubor in vultu, maculaeque caput sparsere leves; tum vapor ipsam corporis arcem flammeus urit
multoque genas sanguine tendit, oculique rigent et sacer ignis
pascitur artus; resonant aures stillatque niger naris aduncae
cruor et venas rumpit hiantes;
    intima creber viscera quassat
gemitus stridens. iamque amplexu
frigida presso saxa fatigant;
quos liberor domus elato
custode sinit, petitis fontes
aliturque sitis latice ingesto.
prostrata iacet turba per aras oratque mori—solum hoc faciles
wide his greedy, gaping jaws and unfolds all his wings, and the boatman who plies the troubled stream with roomy skiff, though hardy in his vigorous old age, can scarce draw back his arms wearied with constant poling, worn out with ferrying the fresh throng o'er. Nay more, they say that the dog has burst his chains of Taenarian iron, and is wandering through our fields; that the earth has rumbled; that ghosts go stealing through the groves, larger than mortal forms; that twice have Cadmean forests trembled and shed their snows; twice has Dirce welled up with blood; in the silent night Amphion's hounds have bayed.

180 O dire appearance and new form of death, far heavier than death! Benumbing languor fetters the listless limbs; the sickly cheeks burn red; small spots overspread the face. Then hot vapours scorch the body's very citadel and distend the cheeks with blood; the eyes stand staring, and accursed fire feeds upon the limbs. There is a ringing in the ears; black blood drips from the strained nostrils and bursts the swelling veins. Full oft does a grating cough rack the inmost frame. Now they strain cold stones close to their breasts; or where new freedom in the house permits, since the watcher has been borne forth, ye  hasten to the springs, and with full draughts feed your fevered thirst. Prostrate the crowds lie at the altars and pray for death—this alone

1 Charon.  2 Cerberus.  3 See Index s.v. “Taenarus.”  4 i.e. the head.  5 Sacer ignis is usually supposed to be erysipelas, “St. Anthony's fire.”  6 He addresses the sick folk who, when the watcher is dead rush to the water, which only inflames their thirst.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

tribuere dei; delubra petunt, haut ut voto numina placent,
sed iuvat ipsos satiare deos.

OEDIPVS

Quisnam ille propero regiam gressu petit?
adestne clarus sanguine ac factis Creo
an aeger animus falsa pro veris videt?

CHORVS

Adest petitus omnibus votis Creo.

OEDIPVS

Horrore quatior, fata quo vergant timens, trepidumque gemino pectus affectu labat;
ubi laeta duris mixta in ambiguo iacent,
icertus animus scire cum cupiat timet.

Germane nostrae coniugis, fessis opem
si quam reportas, voce properata edoce.

CREO

Responsa dubia sorte perplexa iacent.

OEDIPVS

Dubiam salutem qui dat afflictitis negat.
OEDIPUS

the compliant gods bestow. They seek the shrines, not that they may appease the divinities with gifts, but joying to glut the very gods.

[CREON is seen returning from his mission.]

OEDIPUS

Who, pray, is he who seeks the palace with hasty steps? Is Creon at hand, noble in blood and deed, or does my sick fancy see false for true?

CHORUS

He is at hand, Creon, by all our prayers desired.

[Enter Creon.]

OEDIPUS

With dread am I shaken, fearing the trend of fate, and my fluttering heart wavering betwixt two moods; where joy with grief commingled lies in doubt, the uncertain soul fears though it longs to know.

OEDIPUS

Who grants a doubtful help to sufferers, grants none.

1 See Argument.
2 i.e. of the oracle which Creon had been sent to consult.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

CREO

Ambage flexa Delphico mos est deo
arcan a tegere.

OEDIPVS

Fare, sit dubium licet.
ambigua soli noscere Oedipodae datur.

CREO

Caedem expiari regiam exilio deus,
et interemptum Laium ulcisci iubet.
on ante caelo lucidus eurret dies
haustusque tutos aetheris puri dabit.

OEDIPVS

Et quis peremtor incluti regis fuit?
quem memoret ede Phoebus, ut poenas luat.

CREO

Sit, precor, dixisse tutum visu et auditu horrida;
torpor insedit per artus, frigidus sanguis coit.
ut sacrata temp la Phoebi supplici intravi pede et pias numen precatus rite summisi manus, gemina Parnasi nivalis arx trucem fremitum dedit;
imminens Phoebea laurus tremuit et movit comam
ac repente sancta fontis lympha Castalii stetit.
incipit Letoa vates spargere horrentes comas
OEDIPUS

CREON

In mazy riddles is the Delphic god wont to hide his secrets.

OEDIPUS

Speak out, though it be doubtful; to read riddles to Oedipus alone is given.

CREON

The god bids the king's murder be atoned by banishment and the murdered Laïus be avenged. Not sooner shall the bright sun course the heavens, and give wholesome draughts of unpolluted air.

OEDIPUS

And who was the murderer of the illustrious king? Tell whom Phoebus names, that he may pay the penalty.

CREON

May it be safe, I pray, to have told of things to sight and hearing dreadful. Numbness has settled through my limbs; my chill blood freezes. When Phoebus' hallowed shrine I entered with reverent feet and raised pious hands in due supplication to the god, the double peaks of snow-clad Parnassus gave an angry roar; the overhanging laurel of Phoebus trembled and shook its foliage, and suddenly the holy waters of the Castalian spring stood still. The priestess of Leto's son began to fling loose her
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

et pati commota Phoebum. contigit nondum specum
emicat vasto fragore maior humano sonus:

Mitia Cadmeis remeabunt sidera Thebis,
si profugus Dircen Ismenida liquerit hospes
regis caede nocens, Phoebó iam notus et infans.
nec tibi longa manent sceleratae gaudia caedis:
tecum bella geres natis quoque bella relinquens,
turpis maternos iterum revolutos in ortus.

OEDIPVS

Quod facere monitu caelitum iussus paro,
functi cineribus regis hoc decuit dari,
ne sancta quisquam sceptrà violaret dolo.
regi tuenda maxime regum est salus;
curat peremptum nemo quem incolumem timet.

CREO

Curam perempti maior excussit timor.

OEDIPVS

Pium prohibuit ullus officium metus?

CREO

Sphinx et nefandi carminis tristes minae.
OEDIPUS

bristling locks and, deep stirred, to suffer Phoebus. She had not yet reached the cave, when, with a mighty roar, words louder than voice of man leaped forth: ¹

"Kind shall the stars return to the Theban city of Cadmus, If, O fugitive guest, Ismenian Dirce thou leavest, Stained with the blood of a king, from infancy known to Apollo. Brief shall be to thee the joys of thy impious slaughter: With thee war shalt thou bring, and war to thy sons leave behind thee, Foully returned once more to the impious womb of thy mother."

OEDIPUS

That which, at Heaven's warning, I am now prepared to do should fittingly have been done in honour of the dead king's dust, that none might treacherously profane the sacred sceptre. Kings have most need to guard the life of kings; none hath care for him when dead whom alive he fears.

CREON

Our care for the dead a greater fear dispelled.

OEDIPUS

Did any fear prevent a pious duty?

CREON

Aye, the Sphinx and the dire threats of her accursed chant.

¹ The oracles were commonly given out in dactylic hexameters.
Nunc expiertur numinum imperio scelus.
Quisquis deorum regna placatus vides;
tu, tu penes quem iura praecipitis poli
tuque, o sereni maximum mundi decus,

bis sena cursu signa qui vario regis,
qui tarda celeri saecula evolvis rota,
sororque fratri semper occurrents tuo,
noctivaga Phoebe, quique ventorum potens
aequor per altum caerulos currus agis,
et qui carentes luce disponis domos,

adeste: cuius Laius dextra occidit,
hunc non quieta tecta, non fidi lares,
non hospitalis exulem tellus ferat;
thalamis pudendis doleat et prole impia;
hic et parentem dextera perimat sua,
faciatque (num quid gravius optari potest?)
quidquid ego fugi. non erit veniae locus.
per regna iuro quaeque nunc hospes gero
et quae reliqui perque penetrales deos, per te, pater Neptune, qui fluctu brevi
utrimque nostro geminus alludis solo;
et ipse nostris vocibus testis veni,
fatidica vatis ora Cirrhaeae movens:
itamolleseniumducatesettsummumdiem
securus alto reddat in solio parens solasque Merope noverit Polybi faces, ut nulla sentem gratia eripiet mihi.
Now at Heaven’s command let the crime be expiated.

248 Whoever of the gods dost look with favour upon kingdoms—thou,¹ thou whose are the laws of the swift-revolving heavens; and thou,² greatest glory of the unclouded sky, who presidest over the twelve signs ³ in thy changing course, who dost unroll the slow centuries with swift wheel; and thou, his sister, ⁴ ever faring opposite to thy brother, Phoebe, night-wanderer; thou ⁵ whom the winds obey, who over the level deep dost speed thy azure car; and thou ⁶ who dost allot homes devoid of light—do ye all attend: Him by whose hand Laius fell may no peaceful dwelling, no friendly household gods, no hospitable land in exile entertain; over shameful nuptials may he lament and impious progeny; may he, too, slay his own father with his own hand and do—can aught heavier be entreated?—whatever I have fled from. There shall be no place for pardon.

I swear by the sway which I now, a stranger, bear, and by that which I abandoned; by my household gods; by thee, O father Neptune, who in double stream dost play against my shores on either side;⁷ with scanty waves. And do thou ⁸ thyself come as witness to my words, thou who dost inspire the fate-speaking lips of Cirrha’s priestess: So may my father spend peaceful age and end his days secure on his lofty throne; so may Merope know the nuptial torches of her Polybus alone, as by no grace shall the guilty one escape my hand.

¹ Jupiter. ² Phoebus, the sun. ³ i.e. of the Zodiac. ⁴ Phoebe, the moon. ⁵ Neptune. ⁶ Pluto. ⁷ He believes that the Isthmus of Corinth is his native land. ⁸ Apollo.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Sed quo nefandum facinus admissum loco est, memorate: aperto Marte an insidiis iacet?

CREO

Frondifera sanctae nemora Castaliae petens calceavit artis obsitum dumis iter, trigemina qua se spargit in campos via. secat una gratum Phocidos Baccho solum, unde altus arva deserit, caelum petens, clementer acto colle Parnasos biceps; at una bimares Sisyphi terras adit; Olenia in arva tertius trames cava convalle serpens tangit errantes aquas gelidumque dirimit amnis Elei vadum. hic pace fretum subita praedonum manus aggressa ferro facinus occultum tulit.

In tempore ipso sorte Phoebea excitus Tiresia tremulo tardus accelerat genu comesque Manto luce viduatum trahens.

OEDIPVS

Sacrate divis, proximum Phoebo caput, responsa solve; fare, quem poenae petant.

TIRESIA

Quod tarda fatu est lingua, quod quaerit moras haut te quidem, magnanime, mirari addecet;

1 So E: A Elidis: Leo conjectures Aetoli.
OEDIPUS

274 But tell me, where was the impious crime committed? Did he die in open battle or by treachery?

CREON

Seeking holy Castalia's leafy groves, he trod a way hedged in by close-pressing thickets, where the road, three-forking, branches out upon the plains. One road cuts through Phocis, the land that Bacchus loves, whence lofty Parnassus, leaving the lowlands, by a gentle slope lifts heavenward his two peaks; but one leads off to the land 1 of Sisyphus bathed by two seas; a third into the Olenian fields, through a low valley winding, reaches the vagrant waters and crosses the cool shallows of Elis' stream. Here as he fare, relying on peaceful times, a band of robbers suddenly attacked him with the sword and wrought the crime unwitnessed.

[TIRESIAS is seen approaching.]

288 But in the nick of time, stirred by Phoebus' oracle, Tiresias, though slow with trembling limbs, comes hurrying, and with him Manto, leading her sightless father.

[Enter TIRESIAS, old and blind, led by his daughter, MANTO.]

OEDIPUS

O thou to the gods consecrate, thou next to Phoebus' self, explain the oracle; tell whom the fates demand.

TIRESIAS

That my tongue is slow to speak, that it craves delay, it behooves thee not, O great-souled Oedipus,

1 The Isthmus.
visu carenti magna pars veri latet.

sed quo vocat me patria, quo Phoebus, sequar.
fata eruantur; si foret viridis mihi

calidusque sanguis, pectore exciperem deum.

appellite aris candidum tergo bovem
curvoque numquam colla depressam iugo.

fata eruantur; si foret viridis mihi calidusque sanguis, pectore exciperem deum.

appellite aris candidum tergo bovem
curvoque numquam colla depressam iugo. 300

tu lucis inopem, nata, genitorem regens manifesta sacri signa fatidici refer.

MANTO

Opima sanctas victima ante aras stetit.

TIRESIA

In vota superos voce sollemni voca
arasque dono turis Eoi extrue.

MANTO

Iam tura sacris caelitum ingessi focis.

TIRESIA

Quid flamma? largas iamne comprehendit dapes?

MANTO

Subito refulsit lumine et subito occidit.

TIRESIA

Vtrumne clarus ignis et nitidus stetit
rectusque purum verticem caelo tulit 310

452
to wonder; from the blind much of the truth is hidden. But whither my country, whither Phoebus calls me, I will follow. Let us search out the fates; if my blood were fresh and warm, I would receive the god in my own breast.\(^1\) Drive to the altars a pure white bull and a heifer whose neck has never borne the curved yoke. Do thou, my child, who guidest thy blind father, report the clear tokens of the prophetic sacrifice.

[The victims are stationed at the altars as directed.]

MANTO

A perfect victim stands before the sacred altars.

TIRESIAS

To our vows invoke Heaven’s presence with the accustomed prayer, and heap the altars with the Orient’s gift of frankincense.

MANTO

Now have I heaped incense on the gods’ sacred hearth.

TIRESIAS

What of the flame? Doth it already seize upon the generous feast?

MANTO

It flashed up with sudden light, and suddenly died down.

TIRESIAS

Did the fire stand clear and bright? Did it lift a pure, pointed flame straight skyward and, spreading,

\(^1\) i.e. he would speak directly by inspiration instead of proceeding by the different methods of divination.
et summam in auras fusus explicuit comam?
an latera circa serpit incertus viae et fluctuante turbidus fumo labat?

MANTO

Non una facies mobilis flammae fuit.
imbrifera qualis implicat varios sibi Iris colores, parte quae magna poli curvata picto nuntiat nimbos sinu, quis desit illi quive sit dubites color,
caerulea fulvis mixta oberravit notis,
sanguinea rursus; ultima in tenebras abit.

Sed ecce pugnax ignis in partes duas discedit et se scindit unius sacri discors favilla—genitor, horresco intuens:
libata Bacchi dona permutat cruor
ambitque densus regium funus caput ipsosque circa spissior vultus sedet et nube densa sordidam lucem abdidit.
quid sit, parens, effare.

THRESIA

Quid fari queam
inter tumultus mentis attonitae vagus?
quidnam loquar? sunt dira, sed in alto mala;
solet ira certis numinum ostendi notis.
quid istud est quod esse prolatum volunt
iterumque nolunt et truces iras tegunt?
pudet deos nescio quid. hue propere admove et sparge salsa colla taurorum mola.
placidone vultu sacra et admotas manus
patiuntur?
OEDIPUS

unfold its topmost crest upon the air, or sidewise does it creep uncertain of its course, and with wavering smoke fall murmily?

MANTO

Not one appearance only had the changeful flame. As when rain-bringing Iris entwines her various colours, who, over a great space of heaven sweeping, by her painted bow proclaims the storm, so wouldst thou be in doubt what colour is lacking, what is present in the flame; dark blue, mingled with yellow spots, it hovered, then was blood-red, and at last trailed off in blackness.

321 But see, the combative flame is separating into two parts and the discordant embers of one sacred pile are rent in twain—O father, I tremble as I gaze: Bacchus' gift poured out changes to blood, and dense smoke wreathes the king’s head; denser still it settles about his very face and with its thick cloud has hidden light in gloom. O father, tell us what it means.

TIRESIAS

What can I tell, halting mid conflicting voices of a soul amazed? What shall I say? Dire ills they are, but hidden in mystery. 'Tis the gods’ wont with clear signs to manifest their wrath. What is it which they would, and again would not, reveal? What grim menace are they concealing? Something which shames the gods. Quick, bring the victims hither, and with salted meal sprinkle the bullocks necks. With placid mien do they suffer the rites and the outstretched hands?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MANTO
Altum taurus attollens caput primos ad ortus positus expavit diem trepidusque vultum solis et radios fugit.

TIRESIA
Vnone terram vulnere afflictì petunt?

MANTO
Iuvenca ferro semet imposito 1 induit et vulnere uno cecidit, at taurus duos perpessus ictus huc et huc dubius ruit animamque fessus vix reluctantem exprimit.

TIRESIA
Vtrum citatus vulnere angusto micat
an lentus altas irrigat plagas cruor?

MANTO
Huius per ipsam qua patet pectus viam öffusus amnis, huius exiguo graves maculantur ictus imbre; sed versus retro per ora multus sanguis atque oculos redit.

TIRESIA
Infausta magnos sacra terrores cintent.
sed ede certas viscerum nobis notas.

1 So Leo, with E: A opposito: Bentley apposito vel impulso.

456
Facing the east, the bull, lifting high his head, shrank from the day and turned in terror from the sun's bright face.

With one blow smitten do they fall to earth?

The heifer threw herself upon the ready steel and with one blow fell; but the bull, twice smitten, hither and yon wanders uncertain and feebly drives forth his scarce-resisting life.

Does the blood spurt quick from out a narrow thrust, or does it but slowly o'erflood a deep-driven blow?

The blood of one through the proper path, where the breast gapes wide, pours in a stream; the other's grievous wounds are stained with but scanty drops; nay, backward turning, the blood flows copiously through mouth and eyes.

These ill-omened sacrifices rouse dread forebodings. But describe to me the sure marks of the entrails.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

MANTO

Genitor, quid hoc est? non levi motu, ut solent, agitata trepidant exta, sed totas manus quatiunt novusque prosilit venis cruror. cor marcat aegrum penitus ac mersum latet liventque venae; magna pars fibris abest et felle nigro tabidum spumat iecur, ac (semper omen unico imperio grave) en capita paribus bina consurgunt toris; sed utrumque caesum tenuis abseondit caput membrana, latebram rebus occultis negans.1 hostile valido robore insurgit latus septemque venas tendit; has omnes retro prohibens reverti limes oblicus secat. mutatus ordo est, sede nil propria iacet, sed acta retro cuncta: non animae capax in parte dextra pulmo sanguineus iacet, non laeva cordis regio, non molli ambitu omenta pingues visceri obtendunt sinus. natura versa est, nulla lex utero manet. scrutemur, unde tantus hie extis rigor. quod hoc nefas? conceptus innuptae bovis, nec more solito positus, alieno in loco implet parentem; membra cum gemitu movet, rigore tremulo debiles artus micant. infecit atras lividus fibras cruror,

1 The punctuation of Parnabius: Leo membrana: latebran . . . negans | hostile valido, etc.

458
Father, what is this? With no gentle motion, as is their wont, do the entrails shake and quiver, but my whole hand do they cause to tremble and blood spurs afresh from the veins. The heart, diseased through and through, is withered and lies deep hidden, and the veins are of livid hue. A great part of the entrails is wanting, and from the rotting liver black gall oozes forth, and see—ever fatal omen for sole sovereignty—two heads rise side by side with equal bulge; yet each cloven head is hidden in but thin membrane, refusing a lurking place to secret things. The hostile side rises with sturdy strength and shows seven swelling veins; but all these an intercepting line cuts straight across, preventing their return. The positions have been changed; no organ lies in its own place, but all things are reversed: on the right side lie the lungs all clogged with blood, and with no room for breath; the left is not the region of the heart; no caul with soft covering stretches its rich folds over the entrails. Nature is subverted; even the womb follows not its law. Let us look close and see whence comes this stiffness in the entrails. What monstrosity is this? A foetus in an unmated heifer! nor does it lie in accustomed fashion, but fills its mother in an unnatural place. Moaning it moves its limbs, and its weak members twitch with convulsive rigors. Livid gore has stained the entrails black. [She ceases her inspection as the bodies of the victims suddenly begin to move.] The sadly

1 Farnabius, commenting on the passage, says that the haruspices made an imaginary division of the exta into two parts; the one, called familiaris, they assigned to friendly influences, the other, hostilis, to hostile. According to the appearance of both these parts, they foretold coming events.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

temptantque turpes mobilem trunci gradum, et inane surgit corpus ac sacros petit cornu ministros; viscera effugiunt manum. neque ista, quae te pepulit, armenti gravis vox est nec usquam territi resonant greges; immugit aris ignis et trepidant foci.

OEDIPVS

Quid ista sacri signa terrifici ferant exprome; voces aure non timida hauriam. solent suprema facere seuros mala.¹

TIRESIA

His invidebis quibus opem quaeris malis.

OEDIPVS

Memora quod unum scire caelicolae volunt, contaminarit rege quis caeso manus.

TIRESIA

Nec alta caeli quae levi pinna secant nec fibra vivis rapta pectoribus potest ciere nomen; alia temptanda est via; ipse evocandus noctis aeternae plagis, emissus Erebo ut caedis auctorem indicet. reseranda tellus, Ditis inplacabile numen precandum, populus infernae Stygis huc extrahendus. ede cui mandes sacrum; nam te, penes quem summa regnorum, nefas invisere umbras.

¹ Leo deletes this line.
OEDIPUS

mangled forms essay to move, and one disembowelled body strives to rise and menaces the priests with its horns; the entrails flee from my hand. Nor is that sound which strikes thy ears the deep lowing of the herd, nor are frightened cattle bellowing anywhere; it is the lowing of the altar-fires, the affrighted murmurings of the hearth.

OEDIPUS

What do these signs of the terrifying rites portend? Declare; with no timid ear will I drink in thy words Extremest ills are wont to make men calm.

TIRESIAS

Thou wilt look with envy upon these ills for which thou seekest aid.

OEDIPUS

Tell me the one thing the gods would have me know: who has defiled his hands with the murder of the king?

TIRESIAS

Neither the birds which on light pinion cut the depths of heaven, nor vitals plucked from still living breasts, can summon up the name. We must essay some other path: the king himself must be recalled from the regions of perpetual night, that, released from Erebus, he may point out his murderer. We must unseal the earth, must implore the implacable divinity of Dis, must draw forth hither the people of infernal Styx. Say to whom thou wilt assign the awful mission; for 'tis not right for thee, whose are the highest powers of state, to look upon the shades.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

OEDIPVS

Te, Creo, hic poscit labor,
ad quem secundum regna respiciunt 'mea. 400

TIRESIA

Dum nos profundae clastra laxamus Stygis, populare Bacchi laudibus carmen sonet.

CHORVS

Effusam redimite comam nutante corymbo,
mollia Nysaeis armati \textsuperscript{1} bracchia thyrsis!

Lucidum caeli decus, huc ades
votis quae tibi nobiles Thebae, Bacche, tuae
palmis supplicibus ferunt;
huc adverte favens virgineum caput,
vultu sidereo discute nubila et tristes Erebi minas
avidumque fatum.
te decet cingi comam floribus vernis,
te caput Tyria cohibere mitra
hederave mollem
bacifera religare frontem,
spargere effusos sine lege crines,
rursus adducto revocare nodo;
qualis iratam metuens novercam
creveras falsos imitatus artus, crine flaventi simulata virgo,

\textsuperscript{1} Armatus \textit{RET} : armate \psi: armatae Gronovius.

462
Thee, Creon, this task demands, to whom as next in succession my kingdom looks.

While we are loosing the bars of abysmal Styx let the people's hymn sound with the praise of Bacchus.

[Exeunt Creon, Tiresias, and Manto.]

Bind your streaming locks with the nodding ivy, and in your soft hands grasp the Nysaean thrysus!

Bright glory of the sky, come hither to the prayers which thine own illustrious Thebes, O Bacchus, offers to thee with suppliant hands. Hither turn with favour thy virginal face; with thy star-bright countenance drive away the clouds, the grim threats of Erebus, and greedy fate. Thee it becomes to circle thy locks with flowers of the springtime, thee to cover thy head with Tyrian turban, or thy smooth brow to wreathe with the ivy's clustering berries; now to fling loose thy lawless-streaming locks, again to bind them in a knot close-drawn; in such guise as when, fearing thy stepdame's wrath, thou didst grow to manhood with false-seeming limbs,

While the choruses in Seneca's tragedies are often more or less dithyrambic in character, this is his best illustration of the dithyramb. For the explanation of references to various stories connected with the life of Bacchus see Index s.v. "Bacchus" and his other names mentioned by the chorus. That the address of these opening lines is to the Bacchant women is clear from the terms employed: Effusam comam, mollia bracchia. This gives colour to the reading of Gronovius in line 404, armatae.

Juno's.

463
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

lutea vestem retinente zona.
inde tam molles placuere cultus
et sinus laxi fluidumque syrma.
vidit aurato residere currur,
veste cum longa tegeres leones,
omnis Eoae plaga vasta terrae,
qui bibit Gangen niveumque quisquis
frangit Araxen.

Te senior turpi sequitur Silenus asello,
turgida pampineis redimitus tempora sertis;
condita lascivi deducunt orgia mystae.
te Bassaridum comitata cohors
nunc Edono pede pulsavit sola Pangaeo, nunc Threicio
vertice Pindi; nunc Cadmeas
inter matres impia maenas comes Ogygio venit laccho, nebride sacra praecincta latus
thyrsique levem vibrante manu.
tibi commotae pectora matres fudere
comam ¹

iam post laceros Pentheos artus
thyades, oestro membra remissae,
velut ignotum videre nefas.

Ponti regna tenet nitidi matertera Bacchi Nereidumque choris Cadmeia cingitur Ino;
ius habet in fluctus magni puer advena ponti,
cognatus Bacchi, numen non vile Palaemon.

Te Tyrrhenæ, puer, rapuit manus,
et tumidum Nereus posuit mare;
caerula cum pratis mutat freta.

¹ Richter thus transposes l. 439–441: Leo deletes l. 439.
OEDIPUS

a pretended maiden with golden ringlets, with saffron girdle binding thy garments. So thereafter this soft vesture has pleased thee, folds loose hanging and the long-trailing mantle. Seated in thy golden chariot, thy lions with long trappings covered, all the vast coast of the Orient saw thee, both he who drinks of the Ganges and whoever breaks the ice of snowy Araxes.

429 On an unseemly ass old Silenus attends thee, his swollen temples bound with ivy garlands; while thy wanton initiates lead the mystic revels. Along with thee a troop of Bassarids in Edonian dance beat the ground, now on Mount Pangaeus' peak, now on the top of Thracian Pindus; now midst Cadmean dames has come a maenad, the impious comrade of Ogygian Bacchus, with sacred fawn-skins girt about her loins, her hand a light thyrsus brandishing. Their hearts maddened by thee, the matrons have set their hair a-flowing; and at length, after the rending of Pentheus' limbs, the Bacchanals, their bodies now freed from the frenzy, looked on their infamous deed as though they knew it not.

441 Cadmean Ino, foster-mother of shining Bacchus, holds the realms of the deep, encircled by bands of Nereids dancing; over the waves of the mighty deep a boy holds sway, new come, the kinsman of Bacchus, no common god, Palaemon.

449 Thee, O boy, a Tyrrhenian band once captured and Nereus allayed the swollen sea; the dark blue waters he changes to meadows. Thence flourish the hinc verno platanus folio viret
et Phoebó laurus carum nemus;
garrula per ramos avis obstrepit.
vivaces hederas remus tenet,
summa ligat vitis carchesia.
Idæus prora fremuit leo,
tigris puppe sedet Gangeticæ.
tum pirata freto pavidos natat,
et nova demersos facies habet:
bracchia prima cadunt prædonibus
inlisumque utero pectus coit, parvula dependet lateri manus
et dorso fluctum curvo subit, lunata scindit cauda mare;
et sequitur curvus fugientia carbasæ delphin.
Divite Pactolos vexit te Lydius unda, aurea torrenti deducens fluminæ ripa;
laxavit victos arcus Geticasque sagittas
lactæa Massagetæs qui pocula sanguine miscet;
regna securigeri Bacchum sensere Lycurgi;
sensere terræ Zalacum¹ feroces et quos vicinus Boreas ferit
arva mutantes
quasque Maeotis alluit gentes
frigido fluctu
quasque despectat vertice e summo
sidus Arcadium geminumque plastrum.
ille dispersos domuit Gelonos,
arma detraxit trucibus puellis;
ore deflecto petiere terram Thermodontiæae catervae, positisque tandem levibus sagittis
maenades factæ.
sacer Cithaerôn sanguine undavit

¹ A zedacum: Rapheling te Dacum.
plane-tree with vernal foliage and the laurel-grove dear to Phoebus; the chatter of birds sounds loud through the branches. Fast-growing ivy clings to the oars, and grape-vines twine at the mast-head. On the prow an Idaean lion roars; at the stern crouches a tiger of Ganges. Then the frightened pirates swim in the sea, and plunged in the water their bodies assume new forms: the robbers’ arms first fall away; their breasts smite their bellies and are joined in one; a tiny hand comes down at the side; with curving back they dive into the waves, and with crescent-shaped tail they cleave the sea; and now as curved dolphins they follow the fleeing sails.

On its rich stream has Lydian Pactolus borne thee, leading along its burning banks the golden waters; the Massgetan who mingles blood with milk in his goblets has unstrung his vanquished bow and given up his Getan arrows; the realms of axe-wielding Lycurgus have felt the dominion of Bacchus; the fierce lands of the Zalaces have felt it, and those wandering tribes whom neighbouring Boreas smites, and the nations which Maeotis’ cold water washes, and they on whom the Arcadian constellation looks down from the zenith and the wagons twain. He has subdued the scattered Gelonians; he has wrested their arms from the warrior maidens; with downcast face they fell to earth, those Thermodontian hordes, gave up at length their light arrows, and became maenads. Sacred Cithaeron has flowed with the

1 The two phrases refer to the same constellation, conceived first as bears (see Index s.v. “Arctos”), and second as wagons or wains.

2 The Amazons.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Ophioniaque caede;
Proetides silvas petiere, et Argos
praesente Bacchum coluit noverca.

Naxos Aegaeo redimita ponto tradidit thalamis relictam
virginem, meliore pensans damnum marito.

pumice ex sicco
fluxit Nyctelius latex;
garruli gramen secuere rivi,
conhibit dulces humus alta sucos
niveique lactis candidos fontes
et mixta odoro Lesbia cum thymo.
ducitur magno nova nupta caelo;
solemne Phoebus carmen
infusis humero capillis
cantat et geminus Cupido
concucit taedas;
telum deposit et Iuppiter igneum
oditque Baccho veniente fulmen.

Lucida dum current annosi sidera mundi,
Oceanus clausum dum fluctibus ambiet orbem Lunaque dimissos dum plena recolliget ignes, dum matutinos praedicet Lucifer ortus
altaque caeruleum dum Nerea nesciet Arctos, candida formonsi venerabimur ora Lyaei.

1 Referring to Pentheus' death. See Index s.v. “Ophion.”
2 Ariadne, deserted by Theseus.
3 i.e. wine. See Index s.v. “Nyctelius.” The following blood of Ophionian slaughter; the Proetides fled to the woods, and Argos, in his stepdame's very presence, paid homage to Bacchus.

487 Naxos, girt by the Aegean sea, gave him in marriage a deserted maiden, compensating her loss with a better husband. Out of the dry rock there gushed Nyctelian liquor; babbling rivulets divided the grassy meadows; deep the earth drank in the sweet juices, white fountains of snowy milk and Lesbian wine mingled with fragrant thyme. The new-made bride is led to the lofty heavens; Phoebus a stately anthem sings, with his locks flowing down his shoulders, and twin Cupids brandish their torches. Jupiter lays aside his fiery weapons and, when Bacchus comes, abhors his thunderbolt.

504 While the bright stars of the ancient heavens shall run in their courses; while the ocean shall encircle the imprisoned earth with its waters; while the full moon shall gather again her lost radiance; while the Day Star shall herald the dawn of the morning and while the lofty Bears shall know naught of caerulean Nereus; so long shall we worship the shining face of beauteous Lyaeus.

[Enter Creon, returned from the rites of necromancy.]

lines describe the wonders of nature's bounty in honour of Bacchus' nuptials.

4 See Index s. v. "Bacchus."

5 Nereus, a sea-god, is here used for the sea itself, and the description "sea-blue" is literally applied.

6 Bacchus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

OEDIPVS

Etsi ipse vultus flebiles praefert notas, exprome cuius capite placemus deos

CREO

Fari iubes tacere quae suadet metus.

OEDIPVS

Si te ruentes non satis Thebae movent, at sceptra moveant lapsa cognatae domus.

CREO

Nescisse cupies nosse quae nimium expetis.

OEDIPVS

Iners malorum remedium ignorantia est. itane et salutis publicae indicium obrues?

CREO

Vbi turpis est medicina, sanari piget.

OEDIPVS

Audita fare, vel malo domitus gravi quid arma possint regis irati scies.

CREO

Odere reges dicta quae dici iubent.
OEDIPUS

OEDIPUS

Although thy very face displays signs of woe, declare by whose life we are to appease the gods.

CREON

Thou bidst me speak what fear would leave unsaid.

OEDIPUS

If falling Thebes is not enough to move thee, at least be moved by the tottering sceptre of a kindred house.

CREON

Thou wilt long not to have known what thou desirest o'ermuch to know.

OEDIPUS

An idle remedy for ills is ignorance. What ' wilt e'en bury revelations of the public weal?

CREON

Where foul the medicine, 'tis loathsome to be healed.

OEDIPUS

Speak out thy tidings, or, by severe suffering broken, thou shalt know what the power of an angered king can do.

CREON

Kings hate the words whose speaking they compel.
OEDIPVS

Mitteris Erebo vile pro cunctis caput, arcana sacri voce ni retegis tua.

CREO

Tacere liceat. ulla libertas minor a rege petitur?

OEDIPVS

Saepe vel lingua magis regi atque regno muta libertas obest.

CREO

Vbi non licet tacere, quid cuiquam licet?

OEDIPVS

Imperia solvit qui tacet iussus loqui.

CREO

Coacta verba placidus accipias precor.

OEDIPVS

Vlline poena vocis expressae fuit?

CREO

Est procul ab urbe lucus ilicibus niger, Dircaea circa vallis inriguae loca. cupressus altis exerens silvis caput virente semper alligat trunco nemus, curvosque tendit quercus et putres situ
OEDIPUS

OEDIPUS

To Erebus shalt thou be sent, a cheap sacrifice for all, unless by thy speech thou disclose the secrets which the rites reveal.

CREON

Let me be silent. Can any less liberty be sought from kings?

OEDIPUS

Often, e’en more than speech, to king and kingdom dumb liberty brings bane.

CREON

When silence is not allowed, what is allowed?

OEDIPUS

He weakens power who is silent when bidden to speak.

CREON

Words forced from me I pray thee hear with calm.

OEDIPUS

Was any ever punished for speech compelled?

CREON

Far from the city is a grove dusky with ilex-trees near the well-watered vale of Dirce’s fount. A cypress, lifting its head above the lofty wood, with mighty stem holds the whole grove in its evergreen embrace; and an ancient oak spreads its Senecae Tragoediae

annosa ramos. huius abruptit latus edax vetustas; illa, iam scissa cadens radice, fulta pendet aliena trabe.
amara bacas laurus et tiliae leves et Paphia myrtus et per immensum mare
motura remos alnus, et Phoebi obvia, enode Zephyris pinus opponens latus.
medio stat ingens arbor atque umbra gravi silvas minores urget et magno ambitu diffusa ramos una defendit nemus.
tristis sub illa, lucis et Phoebi inscius,
restagnat umor frigore aeterno rigens;
limosa pigrum circumit fontem palus.

Huc ut sacerdos intulit senior gradum,
haut est moratus; praestitit noctem locus.
tum effossa tellus, et super rapti rogis iaciuntur ignes. ipse funesto integit vates amictu corpus et frondem quatit.
lugubris inos palla perfundit pedes,
squalente cultu maestus ingreditur senex,
mortifera canam taxus adstringit comam.
nigro bidentes vellere atque atrae boves
retro 1 trahuntur. flamma praedatur dapes, vivumque trepidat igne ferali pecus.
vocat inde manes teque qui manes regis
et obsidentem claustra Lethaei lacus, carmenque magicum volvit et rabido minax
decantat ore quidquid aut placat leves

1 So A: Leo antro, with E: Richter intro.
gnarled branches crumbling in decay. The side of one devouring time has torn away; the other, falling, its roots rent in twain, hangs propped against a neighbouring trunk. Here are the laurel with bitter berries, slender linden-trees, Paphian myrtle, and the alder, destined to sweep its oarage over the boundless sea; and here, mounting to meet the sun, a pine-tree lifts its knotless bole to front the winds. Midmost stands a tree of mighty girth, and with its heavy shade overwhelmgs the lesser trees and, spreading its branches with a mighty reach, it stands, the solitary guardian of the wood. Beneath this tree a gloomy spring o'erflows, that knows nor light nor sun, numb with perpetual chill; an oozy swamp surrounds the sluggish pool.

Hither when the aged priest came, there was no delay; the place furnished night. Then a ditch is dug and into it are thrown brands plucked from funeral pyres. The priest shrouds his body in a mournful pall and waves a branch. His gloomy robe sweeps o'er his feet; in the squalid garb of mourning the old man advances, his hoary hair bound with a wreath of death-dealing yew. Black-fleeced sheep and oxen of sable hue are backward dragged. The flame devours the feast, and the living victims writhe in the deathly fire. Then he summons the spirits of the dead, and thee who rulest the spirits, and him who blocks the entrance to the Lethaean stream; o'er and o'er he repeats a magic rune, and fiercely, with frenzied lips, he chants

The proposed rites were ordinarily performed only at night.

i.e. of some funereal tree, as the yew or cypress.

These features are characteristic of the rites of necromancy which are here described.

Cerberus.
aut cogit umbras; sanguinem libat focis solidasque pecudes urit et multo specum saturat cruore; libat et niveum insuper lactis liquorem, fundit et Bacchum manu laeva canitque rursus ac terram intuens graviore manes voce et attonita citat.

Latravit Hecates turba; ter valles cavae suere maestum, tota successo solo pulsata tellus. “audior” vates ait, “rata verba fudi; rumpitur caecum chaos iterque populis Ditis ad superos datur.” subsidit omnis silva et erexit comas, duxere rimas robora et totum nemus concussit horror, terra se retro dedit gemuitque penitus—sive temptari abditum Acheron profundum mente non aqua tulit, sive ipsa Tellus, ut daret functis viam, compage rupta sonuit; aut ira furens triceps catenas Cerberus movit graves.

Subito dehiscit terra et immenso sinu laxata patuit. ipse torpentes lacus vidi inter umbras, ipse pallentes deos noctemque veram; gelidus in venis stetit haesitque sanguis. saeva prosiluit cohors et stetit in armis omne vipereum genus, fratrum catervae dente Dircaeo satae. tum torva Erinys sonuit et caecus Furor Horrorque et una quidquid aeternae creant
a charm which either appeases or compels the flitting ghosts. He makes libation of blood upon the altars, burns the victims whole, and soaks the trench with plenteous blood. Of snowy milk likewise he makes libation, pours wine with his left hand, repeats his chants, and, with gaze on ground, summons the ghosts with deeper tone and wild.

Loud bayed the pack of Hecate; thrice the deep valley gave out a mournful noise; the whole place was shaken and the ground was stricken from below. "My prayers are heard," says the priest; "prevailing words I uttered; blind Chaos is burst open, and for the tribes of Dis a way is given to the upper world." All the wood shrank down, its foliage bristling; the stout oaks were split and the whole grove shook with horror; the earth also shrank back, and from her depths gave forth a groan—whether Hell brooked it ill that its deep abyss was assailed, or Earth of herself, that she might give passage to the dead, with crashing noise burst her close barriers; or else in mad rage three-headed Cerberus shook his heavy chains.

Suddenly the earth yawned and opened wide with gulf immeasurable. Myself, I saw the numb pools amidst the shadows; myself, the wan gods and night in very truth. My frozen blood stood still and clogged my veins. Forth leaped a savage cohort and stood full-armed, the whole viper brood, the troop of brothers sprung from Dircaean teeth. Then grim Erinys shrieked, and blind Fury and Horror, and all the forms which spawn and lurk midst the eternal

1 Because offered to the malignant infernal powers.
2 A far-fetched epithet from the fact that it was in Dirce's cave that the dragon was found which Cadmus slew and from whose teeth the warriors sprang.
celantque tenebrae: Luctus avellens comam
aegreque lassum sustinens Morbus caput, gravis Senectus sibimet et pendens Metus avidumque populi Pestis Ogygii malum.
nos liquit animus. ipsa quae ritus sensis artesque norat stupuit. intrepidus parens audaxque damno convocat Ditis feri exsanguem vulgus.

Ilico ut nebulae leves
volitant et auras libero caelo trahunt.
non tot caducas educat frondes Eryx
nec vere flores Hybla tot medio creat, cum examen arto nectitur densum globo,
fluctusque non tot frangit Ionium mare,
nec tanta gelidi Strymonis fugiens minas
permutat hiemes ales et caelum secans tepente Nilo pensat Arctoas nives quot ille populos vatis eduxit sonus.
avide latebras nemoris umbrosi petunt
animae trementes; primus emergit solo,
dextra ferocem cornibus taurum premens, Zethus, manuque sustinens laeva chelyn
qui saxa dulci traxit Amphion sono;
interque natos Tantalis tandem suos
tuto superba fert caput fastu grave et numerat umbras. peior hac genetrix adest furibunda Agaue, tota quam sequitur manus
partita regem, sequitur et Bacchas lacer Pentheus tenetque saevus etiam nunc minas.
shades: Grief, tearing her hair; Disease, scarce holding up her wearied head; Age, burdened with herself; impending Fear, and greedy Pestilence, the Ogygian people’s curse. Our spirits died within us. Even she who knew the rites and the arts of her aged sire stood amazed. But he, undaunted and bold from his lost sight, summons the bloodless throng of cruel Dis.

593 Straightway, like clouds, the shadowy forms flit forth and snuff the air of open heaven. Not as many falling leaves does Eryx show; nor does Hybla in mid-spring as many flowers produce, when in close masses clinging the swarming bees; as many waves break not on the Ionian sea; as many birds, fleeing cold Strymon’s threats, leave not the wintry lands and, cleaving the sky, change Arctic snows for the warm valley of the Nile; as were the throngs which the priest’s call summoned forth. Eagerly the shivering ghosts seek the shelter of the shady grove. First from the ground, his right hand grasping a wild bull by the horns, Zethus emerges, and Amphion, in his left holding the shell which by its sweet music drew the rocks. And midst her children Tantalis, at last safe in her pride, holds up her head with insolent arrogance, and numbers o’er her shades. A mother worse than she, Agave comes, still raging; her the whole band follows who rent their king in pieces, and after the Bacchanals mangled Pentheus comes, even now savage and holding to his threats.

1 Manto 2 Niobe.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Tandem vocatus saepe pudibundum extulit caput atque ab omni dissidet turba procul celatque semet (instat et Stygias preces geminat sacerdos, donec in apertum effera tultus opertos)—Laius! fari horreo.
stetit per artus sanguine effuso horridus,
paedore foedo squalidam obtectus comam,
et ore rabido fatur: "O Cadmi effer, cruore semper laeta cognato domus,
vibrate thyrsos, enthea natos manu
lacerate potius; maximum Thebis scelus—
maternus amor est. patria, non ira deum, sed scelere raperis. non gravi flatu tibi luctificus Auster nec parum pluvio aethere
satia ta tellus halitu sicco nocet, sed rex cruentus, pretia qui saevae necis
sceptr a et nefandos occupat thalamos patris, inve proles—sed tamen peior parens
quam natus, uto rursus infasto gravis;
egitque in ortus semet et matri impios fetus regessit, quique vix mos est feris fratres sibi ipse genuit—implícitum malum magisque monstrum Sphinge perplexum sua.
te, te cruenta sceptr a qui dextra geris,
te pater inultus urbe cum tota petam
et mecum Erinyn pronubam thalami traham, traham sonantem 1 verbera, incestam domum
vertam et penates impio Marte obteram.
Proinde pulsum finibus regem ocius
agite exulem quocumque funesto gradu;
solum relinquit; vere florifero virens

1 So Gronovius: Leo sonontes, with A: Richter sonantis, with E: de Wilamowitz trahans silentes, verbere.
At length, when often called, one lifts his shame-stricken head and, shrinking afar from all the throng, seeks to hide himself. The seer presses hard after him and redoubles his Stygian prayers, until he bring out to open view the features that fain would hide—Laïus! I shudder as I tell it. There he stood, a sight of horror, his limbs streaming o'er with blood, his ragged locks matted with foul filth; and with raving lips he spoke: "O savage house of Cadmus, rejoicing ever in kindred blood, brandish the thyrsus, with frenzied hands rend thy sons—'twere better so; for Thebes' crowning crime is—the love of mother. O fatherland, not by the wrath of Heaven, but by sin art thou despoiled. 'Tis not the plague-fraught south wind with its destructive blast, nor yet the earth, too little watered by the rain from heaven, that with its dry breath is harming thee; but thy blood-stained king, who as the price of cruel murder has seized the sceptre and the incestuous chamber of his sire, detested son!—but worse the mother than the son, again pregnant in her unhallowed womb; and to his own origin he returned and brought his mother impious progeny, and (a thing the beasts scarce do) himself begot brothers to himself—entanglement of evil, a monster more confused than his own Sphinx. Thee, thee, who in thy blood-stained hand dost hold the sceptre, thee and thy whole city will I, thy father, still unavenged, pursue; and with me Erinyas as bridesmaid of thy nuptials will I bring, yea, I will bring her sounding with her lash; thine incestuous house will I overturn and thy household with unnatural strife will I destroy.

"Wherefore speedily expel ye the king from out your borders, in exile drive him to any place so-ever with his baleful step. Let him leave the land;
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

reparabit herbas, spiritus puros dabit vitalis aura, veniet et silvis decor; Letum Luesque, Mors Labor Tabes Dolor, comitatus illo dignus, excedent simul.
et ipse rapidis gressibus sedes volet effugere nostras, sed graves pedibus moras addam et tenebo; repet incertus viae, baculo senili triste praetemptans iter.
eripite terras, auferam caelum pater."

OEDIPVS

Et ossa et artus gelidus invasit tremor;
quidquid timebam facere fecisse arguor—
tori iugalis abnuit Merope nefas, sociata Polybo; sospes absolvit manus Polybus meas. uterque defendit parens caedem stuprumque; quis locus culpae est super?
multo ante Thebae Laium amissum gemunt, Boeota gressu quam meo tetigi loca.
falsusne senior an déus Thebis gravis?—
im iam tenemus callidi socios doli:
mentitur ista praefere deos vates, tibique sceptra despondet mea.

CREO

Egone ut sororem regia expelli velim?
si me fides sacrata cognati laris
non contineret in meo certum statu, tamen ipsa me fortuna terreret nimis
then, blooming with flowers of spring, shall it renew its verdure, the life-giving air shall give pure breath again, and their beauty shall come back to the woods; Ruin and Pestilence, Death, Suffering, Corruption and Distress, fit company for him, shall all depart together. And he himself with hastening steps shall long to flee our kingdom, but I will set weari-some delays before his feet and hold him back. He shall creep, uncertain of his way, with the staff of age groping out his gloomy way. Rob ye him of the earth; his father will take from him the sky.'

OEDIPUS

An icy chill has crept through my bones and limbs; all that I feared to do I am accused of having done. But Merope, still wed to Polybus, refutes the charge of incest; and Polybus, alive and well, cleanses my hands. Each parent clears me from the charge of blood and incest: what room is left for crime? As for Laïus, Thebes mourned his loss long ere I set foot on Boeotian soil. Is the old priest lying, or is some god oppressing Thebes?—Now, now I hold the confederates of a crafty plot: the priest invents these charges, using the gods as a screen for trickery and to thee he promises my sceptre.

CREON

I, should I wish my sister driven from the throne? If sacred fealty to my kindred house held me not fixed in my present station, yet that high estate itself, ever o'erfraught with care, would frighten me. Let it be thine in safety to lay off this burden,

1 Both passages point to Oedipus' self-inflicted blindness.
2 i.e. bringing sedition as well as pestilence.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

dollicita semper. liceat hoc tuto tibi exuere pondus nec recedentem opprimat; iam te minore tutior pones loco.

OEDIPVS

Hortaris etiam, sponte deponam ut mea tam gravia regna?

CREO

Suadeam hoc illis ego, in utrumque quis est liber etiamnum status; tibi iam necesse est ferre fortunam tuam.

OEDIPVS

Certissima est regnare cupienti via laudare modica et otium ac somnum loqui. ab inquieto saepe simulatur quies.

CREO

Parumne me tam longa defendit fides?

OEDIPVS

Aditum nocendi perfido praestat fides.

CREO

Solutus onere regio regni bonis fruor domusque civium coetu viget, nec ulla vicibus surgit alternis dies qua non propinqui munera ad nostros lares sceptri redundent; cultus, opulentae dapes, donata multi Gratia nostra salus. quid tam beatae desse fortunae rear?
nor let it o’erwhelm thee when thou wouldst withdraw. Now more safely wilt thou set thyself in humbler place.

Dost even urge me of free will to lay down the heavy cares of state?

Thus would I counsel those to whom the way e’en yet is open to either choice; but as for thee ’tis necessary now to bear thy lot.

Whoso longs to reign, his surest way is to praise humble life and prate of ease and sleep. Calm is oft counterfeited by a restless soul.

Does not my long loyalty plead enough for me?

To traitors loyalty gives opening for treason.

Free from a king’s burdens, I enjoy a king’s advantages; my home is honoured by throngs of citizens, and no day rises to dawning from the night on which my royal kinsman’s bounty does not overflow my house; apparel, rich food, deliverance, all are granted to many through my favour. What should I think still lacking to a lot so blest?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

OEDIPVS
Quod dest; secunda non habent umquam modum.

CREO
Incognita igitur ut nocens causa cadam?

OEDIPVS
Num ratio vobis reddita est vitae meae? num audita causa est nostra Tiresiae? tamen sontes videmur. facitis exemplum; sequor.

CREO
Quid si innocens sum?

OEDIPVS
Dubia pro certis solent timere reges.

CREO
Qui pavet vanos metus, vero meretur.

OEDIPVS
Quisquis in culpa fuit, dimissus odit; omne quod dubium est cadat.

CREO
Sic odia sunt

OEDIPVS
Odia qui nimium timet regnare nescit; regna custodit metus.
OEDIPUS

What still is lacking; prosperity has no bounds.

CREON

Shall I then, my cause unheard, fall like a criminal?

OEDIPUS

Did ye show due regard unto my life? Did Tiresias hear my cause? And yet ye hold me guilty. Ye set the example; I but follow it.

CREON

What if I am innocent?

OEDIPUS

Doubts as if certainties kings are wont to fear.

CREON

Who trembles with vain fear, true fear deserves.

OEDIPUS

Set free the guilty, and he hates; let all that's doubtful perish.

CREON

Thus is hatred bred.

OEDIPUS

He who fears hatred overmuch, knows not to rule; fear is the guard of kingdoms.

1 i.e. royal power.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

CREO

Qui sceptrā duro saevus imperio regit,
timet timentes; metus in auctorem redit.

OEDIPVS

Servate sōtem saxeo inclusum specu.
ipse ad penates regios referam gradum.

CHORVS

Non tu tantis causa periclis,
non hinc Labdacidas petunt
fata, sed veteres deum irae secuntur. Castalium nemus umbram Sidonio praebuit hospiti lavitque Dirce Tyrios colonos,
ut primum magni natus Agenoris,
fessus per orbem furta sequi Iovis,
sub nostra pavidus constitit arbores
praedonem venerans suum, monituque Phoebi
iussus erranti comes ire vaccae,
quam non flexerat
vomer aut tardi iuga curva plaustri, descruit fugas nomenque genti inauspicata de bove tradidit.

Tempore ex illo nova monstra semper
protulit tellus:
aut anguis imis vallibus editus
annosa supra robora sibilat, superatque 1 pinus;

1 So Richter, with E: Leo supraque, with A.
OEDIPUS

CREON

Who harshly wields the sceptre with tyrannic sway, fears those who fear; terror recoils upon its author's head.

OEDIPUS [to attendants]

Shut up the guilty man in a rocky dungeon and guard him well. I to the royal palace will return.

[CREON is led away by attendants. Exit OEDIPUS.]

CHORUS

Not thou 1 the cause of our great perils, not on thy account do the fates assail the house of Labdacus; nay, 'tis the ancient wrath of the gods that follows us. Castalia's grove lent its shade to the Sidonian wanderer 2 and Dirce bathed the colonists from Tyre, what time great Agenor's son, 2 weary with tracking Jove's thefts 3 over all the world, in fear halted beneath our trees, worshipping his sister's ravisher; and, by the advice of Phoebus, bidden to follow a straying heifer which had never bent beneath the plough or the slow wain's curving yoke, he gave over his quest 4 and named a nation 5 from that ill-omened heifer.

725 From that time on, our land has e'er produced strange monsters: either a serpent, rising from the valley's depth, hisses on high above the ancient oaks and overtops the pines; ever higher, above the

---

1 Oedipus.
2 Cadmus.
3 Europa, whom Jove, in bull form, had stolen away. Agenor had sent Cadmus to find her, with instructions not to return unless successful.
4 i.e. the quest enjoined upon him by his father.
5 Boeotia, from Βοιωτία.

489
supra Chaonias celsior arbores
erexit caeruleum caput,
cum maiore sui parte recumberet;
aut feta tellus impio partu
effudit arma: sonuit reflexo classicum cornu lituusque adunco stridulos cantus elisit aere;
non ante lingus agiles et ora
vocis ignotae clamore primum hostico experti.

Agmina campos cognata tenent,
dignaque iacto semine proles,
uno aetatem permensa die,
post Luciferi nata meatus
ante Hesperios occidit ortus.
horret tantis advena monsris
populique timet bella recentis, donec cecidit saeva iuventus
genetrixque suo reddi gremio
modo productos vidit alumnos, hac transierit civile nefas!
illa Herculeae norint Thebae
proelia fratrum!

Quid Cadmei fata nepotis,
cum vivacis cornua cervi
frontem ramis texere novis
dominumque canes egere suum?
praeceps silvas montesque fugit
citus Actaeon agilique magis
pede per saltus ac saxa vagus metuit motas zephyris plumas
et quae posuit retia vitat;

1 Leo deletes this line.
2 Leo comments: post 734 dictum oportuit spartos pugnam inivisse.
Chaonian trees he lifts his dark-blue head, although his greater part still lies upon the ground; or else the earth, teeming with impious birth, brings forth armed men: loud resounded the battle-call from the curving horn, and the brazen trumpet sent forth its piercing notes. Their tongues and lips, ne'er nimble before, were first employed in the battle-cry of their unfamiliar voice.

738 The kindred bands filled the plains, and this offspring, worthy the seed that had been sown, measured their life by a single day; born after the passing of the Morning Star, they perished ere Hesperus arose. The wanderer quaked at prodigies so strange, and fearfully awaited the assault of the new-born folk; until the savage youth fell in death, and their mother beheld the children she had but now brought forth returned to her own bosom. With this may the horror of civil strife have passed! May the Thebes of Hercules know those fratricidal struggles only!

751 What of the doom of Cadmus' grandson, when the antlers of a long-lived stag covered his brow with their strange branches, and his own hounds pursued their master? Headlong from the woods and mountains the swift Actaeon fled, and with feet more nimble, scouring glades and rocky places, shuddered at the feathers fluttering in the breeze, and avoided the snares he himself had set; at length he gazed into the still

1 i.e. Cadmus, exiled by his father.
2 The monsters sprung from the dragon's teeth.
3 The earth.
4 Hercules was born at Thebes.
5 Tied to bushes along deer-runs in order to frighten the animals in the desired direction.
donec placidi fontis inunda cornua vidit vultusque feros.
ibi virgineos foverat artus
nimium saevi diva pudoris!

OEDIPVS

Curas revolvit animus et repetit metus.
obisse nostro Laium scelere autumant
superi inferique, sed animus contra innocens sibique melius quam dei notus negat.
redit memoria tenue per vestigium,
cecidesse nostri stipitis pulsu obvium datumque Diti, cum prior iuvenem senex
curru superbus pelleret, Thebis procul
Phocaea trifidas regio qua scindit vias.

Unanima coniunx, explica errores precor;
quae spatia moriens Laius vitae tulit?
primone in aevo viridis an fracto occidit?

IOCASTA

Inter senem iuvenemque, sed propior seni.

OEDIPVS

Frequensne turba regium cinxit latus?

IOCASTA

Plures fefellit error ancipitis viae,
paocos fidelis curribus iunxit labor.

OEDIPVS

Aliquisne cecidit regio fato comes?
pool's water and saw his horns and his beast-like countenance. 'Twas in that same pool the goddess of too stern chastity had bathed her virgin limbs!

OEDIPUS

My soul broods o'er its cares and renews its fears. That by my crime Laius fell, gods both of heaven and hell affirm; and yet my soul, conscious of innocence and known to itself better than to the gods, makes denial. Retracing the dim path of memory, I see one met on the way fallen 'neath the blow of my stout staff and given o'er to Dis; but first the old man arrogantly from his car thrust the younger from the way. Yet that was far from Thebes, where Phocis' land parts the three-forked roads.

[Enter Jocasta.]

773 O thou, my soul's own mate, resolve my doubts, I pray thee; what span of life had Laius at his death? In the fresh prime of life died he, or in broken age?

JOCASTA

Midway between age and youth, but nearer age.

OEDIPUS

Did a great throng gird the king about?

JOCASTA

The most mistook the uncertain path and strayed; a few by faithful toil kept near his car.

OEDIPUS

Did any companion share the royal fate?

1 Diana.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

IOCASTA
Vnum fides virtusque consortem addidit.

OEDIPVS
Teneo nocentem; convenit numerus, locus; sed tempus adde.

IOCASTA
Decima iam metitur seges.

SENEX CORINTHIUS
Corinthius te populus in regnum vocat patrium. quietem Polybus aeternam obtinet.

OEDIPVS
Vt undique in me saeva Fortuna irruit! edissere agedum, quo cadat fato pares.

SENEX
Animam senilem mollis exsolvit sopor.

OEDIPVS
Genitor sineulla caede defunctus iacet. testor, licet iam tollere ad caelum pie puras neculla scelera metuentes manus. sedpars magis metuenda fatorum manet.

SENEX
Omnem paterna regna discutient metum.
OEDIPUS

JOCASTA
One did faith and valour cause to share his fate.

OEDIPUS [aside]
I have the guilty man; the number tallies, and the place. [To JOCASTA.] But add the time.

JOCASTA
Now is the tenth harvest being reaped.

[Enter an old Corinthian messenger.]

OLD MAN [to OEDIPUS]
The Corinthians summon thee to thy father's throne. Polybus has gained his everlasting rest.

OEDIPUS
How heartless Fortune assails me on every hand! But tell me by what fate my sire is fallen.

OLD MAN
Soft slumber set his aged spirit free.

OEDIPUS
My father lies dead, and by no violence. I call to witness that now I may lift clean hands to heaven, hands that need fear no charge of crime. But the more fearful part of my fates remains.

OLD MAN
All fears thy father's kingdom will dispel.
SENEXAE TRAGOEDIAE

OEDIPVS
Repetam paterna regna; sed matrem horreo.

SENEX
Metuis parentem, quae tuum reditum expetens sollicita pendet?

OEDIPVS
Ipsa me pietas fugat.

SENEX
Viduam relinques?

OEDIPVS
Tangis en ipsos metus!

SENEX
Effare mersus quis premat mentem timor; praestare tacitam regibus soleo fidem.

OEDIPVS
Conubia matris Delphico admonitu tremo. 800

SENEX
Timere vana desine et turpes metus depone; Merope vera non fuerat pares.

OEDIPVS
Quod subditivi praemium nati petit?
496
OEDIPUS

OEDIPUS
I would seek my father's kingdom, but from my mother do I shrink.

OLD MAN
Dost fear thy mother, who, in anxious suspense, longs for thy coming?

OEDIPUS
'Tis love itself bids me flee.

OLD MAN
Wilt leave her widowed?

OEDIPUS
There dost thou touch on the very thing I fear!

OLD MAN
Speak out; what hidden fear weighs on thy soul? 'Tis my wont to offer kings a loyal silence.

OEDIPUS
Warned by the Delphic oracle, I dread my mother's bed.

OLD MAN
Then cease thy empty fears, thy horrible forebodings; Merope was not in truth thy mother.

OEDIPUS
What did she hope to gain by a changeling son?
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

SENEX
Regum superbam liberi astringunt sidem.

OEDIPVS
Secreta thalami fare quo excipias modo.

SENEX
Hae te parenti parvulum tradunt manus.

OEDIPVS
Tu me parenti tradis; at quis me tibi?

SENEX
Pastor nivoso sub Cithaeronis iugo.

OEDIPVS
In illa temet nemora quis casus tuit?

SENEX
Illo sequebar monte cornigeros greges.

OEDIPVS
Nunc adice certas corporis nostri notas.

SENEX
Forata ferro gesseras vestigia, tumore nactus nomen ac vitio pedum.

1 So Leo with the best MSS.: Regnum superbam, etc., A.

1 The meaning of this sententia, especially in its application as Merope's reason for secretly adopting a son, is not altogether clear. Various suggestions have been offered by commentators.
Kings' children hold rude loyalty in check.¹

The secrets of the chamber—tell how thou knowest them.

'Twas these hands gave thee, a tiny babe, unto thy mother.

Thou gav'st me to my mother; but who gave me to thee?

A shepherd, 'neath Cithaeron's snowy peak.

What chance brought thee within that wood?

On that mountain-side was I tending my horned flocks.

Now name also the sure marks upon my body.

Thy soles had been pierced with iron, and thou hast thy name² from thy swollen and crippled feet.

As to the interpretation. Perhaps the simplest interpretation is the best, that royal offspring (and hence the insurance of succession) is the strongest hold upon lagging loyalty which threatens to fall away.

² Oldίπους, "swollen-footed."
QUIS fuerit ille qui meum dono dedit corpus requiro.

REGIOS pavit greges; minor sub illo turba pastorum fuit.

Eloquere nomen.

Prima languescit senum memoria longo lassa sublabens situ.

Potesne facie noscere ac vultu virum?

Fortasse noscam; saepe iam spatio obrutam levis exoletam memoriam revocat nota.

Ad sacra et aras omne compulsum pecus duces sequantur; ite, propere accersite, famuli, penes quos summa consistit gregum.

Sive ista ratio sive fortuna occulit, latere semper patere quod latuit diu; saepe eruentis veritas patuit malo.
OEDIPUS

OEDIPUS
Who was he who gave thee my body as a gift? I seek to know.

OLD MAN
He fed the royal flocks; there was a humbler band of shepherds under him.

OEDIPUS
Tell me his name.

OLD MAN
An old man's early memory grows faint, failing through weakness and long disuse.

OEDIPUS
Couldst recognize the man by face and feature?

OLD MAN
Perchance I might; some trifling mark oft-times calls back the memory of things that time hath buried and made dim.

OEDIPUS
Let all the flocks be driven hither to the sacred altars, their guides with them; go, slaves, and quickly summon those with whom is the herds' chief control.

[The slaves depart on the errand.]

OLD MAN
Whether design or chance conceals these things, suffer to lie hid for ever what has lain hid so long; truth often is made clear to the discoverer's bane.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

OEDIPVS
Malum timeri maius his aliquod potest?

SENEX
Magnum esse magna mole quod petitur scias. concurririt illine publica, hinc regis salus, utrimque paria; contine medias manus, nihil lacessas, ipsa se fata explicent.

OEDIPVS
Non expedit concutere felicem statum; tuto movetur quidquid extremo in loco est

SENEX
Nobilius aliquid genere regali appetis? ne te parentis pigeat inventi vide.

OEDIPVS
Vel paenitendi sanguinis quaeram fidem; sic nosse certum est.

Ecce grandaevus senex, arbitria sub quo regii fuerant gregis, Phorbas. refersne nomen aut vultum senis?

SENEX
Adridet animo forma; nec notus satis, nec rursus iste vultus ignotus mihi.

1 Modern editors have rightly assigned l. 833 to Oedipus, whereas old editors, with A, gave the line to the Old Man.
OEDIPUS

OEDIPUS

Can any bane greater than all this be feared?

OLD MAN

Great, be thou sure, is that bane which thou seekst with toil so great. Here meet, from that side and from this, the public weal and the king's, and both are in equal balance. Keep thy hand from both; challenge thou nothing; let the fates unfold themselves.¹

OEDIPUS

'Tis not expedient to disturb a happy state; that is with safety changed which is at its worst.

OLD MAN

Dost seek for a nobler thing than royal lineage? Beware lest thou rue the finding of thy parentage.

OEDIPUS

I will seek certainty even of rueful birth; so resolved am I to know.

[Enter Phorbas. Oedipus to himself.]

Behold the ancient, heavy with years, once keeper of the royal flocks, Phorbas. [To Old Man.] Dost recall the old man's name or features?

OLD MAN

His form comes easily to my memory; but that face, while not well known, again is not unknown to me.

¹ i.e. let well enough alone. The condition of the state is critical, and Oedipus' personal problem is acute; but wisdom bids keep hands off and let the fates unfold themselves.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Regnum optinente Laio famulus greges agitasti opimos sub Cithaeronis plaga?

PHORBAS

Laetus Cithaeron pabulo semper novo aestiva nostro prata summittit gregi.

SENEX

Noscisne memet?

PHORBAS

Dubitat anceps memoria.

OEDIPVS

Huic aliquis a te traditur quondam puer? effare. dubitas? cur genas mutat color? quid verba quaeris? veritas odit moras. 850

PHORBAS

Obducta longo temporum tractu moves.

OEDIPVS

Fatere, ne te cogat ad verum dolor.

PHORBAS

Inutile isti munus infantis dedi; non potuit ille luce, non caelo frui.

SENEX

Procul sit omen! vivit et vivat precor.

504
OEDIPUS

[To Phorbas.]

While Laïus held the throne, didst ever as a slave drive rich flocks on Cithaeron's tracts?

PHORBAS

Cithaeron, abounding ever in fresh pasturage, in summer-time gave feeding-ground for my flocks.

OLD MAN

Dost thou know me?

PHORBAS

My memory falters and is in doubt.

OEDIPUS

PHORBAS

Thou stirrest matters o'erclouded by long lapse of time.

OEDIPUS

Speak, lest pain force thee to the truth.

PHORBAS

I did give him an infant, a worthless gift; never could he have enjoyed the light or sky.

OLD MAN

Far be the omen! He lives and I pray may live.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

OEDIPVS
Superesse quare traditum infan tem negas?

PHORBAS
Ferrum per ambos tenue transactum pedes ligabat artus, vulneri innatus tumor puerile foeda corpus urebat lues.

OEDIPVS
Quid quaeris ultra? fata iam accedunt prope. 860 quis fuerit infans edoce.

PHORBAS
Prohibet fides.

OEDIPVS
Huc aliquis ignem! flamma iam excutiet fidem.

PHORBAS
Per tam cru entus vera quaerentur vias? ignosce quaeso.

OEDIPVS
Si ferus videor tibi et impotens, parata vindicta in manu est:
dic vera. quisnam? quove generatus patre?
oua matre genitus?

PHORBAS
Coniuge est genitus tua.
OEDIPUS

OEDIPUS

Why dost thou say that the child thou gavest did not survive?

PHORBAS

Through both his feet a slender iron rod was driven, binding his legs together. A swelling engendered in the wound, galled the child's body, a loathsome plague.

OEDIPUS [to himself]

Why seekest further? Now doth fate draw near. [To PHORBAS.] Who was the babe? Speak out.

PHORBAS

My loyalty forbids.

OEDIPUS

Hither with fire, someone! Now shall flames banish loyalty.

PHORBAS

Is truth to be sought along such cruel ways? Pardon I beg.

OEDIPUS

If I seem harsh to thee, and headstrong, vengeance is in thy hands; speak thou the truth. Who was he? Of what sire begot? Of what mother born?

PHORBAS

Born of thy—wife.
Dehisce, tellus, tuque tenebrarum potens,
in Tartara ima, rector umbrarum, rape
retro reversas generis ac stirpis vices.
congerite, cives, saxa in infandum caput,
mactate telis. me petat ferro parens,
me natus, in me coniuges arment manus
fratresque, et aeger populus ereptos rogis iaculetur ignes. saeculi crimen vagor,
odium deorum, iuris exitium sacri,
qua luce primum spiritus hausi rudes
iam morte dignus. redde nunc animos acres,¹ nunc aliquid aude sceleribus dignum tuis.
i, perge, propero regiam gressu pete;
gratare matri liberis auctam domum.

CHORUS
Fata si liceat mihi
fingere arbitrio meo,
temperem zephyro levi
vela, ne pressae gravi
spiritu antennae tremant.
lenis et modice fluens
aura nec vergens latus
ducat intrepidam ratem;
tuta me media vehat
vita decurrens via.

Cnosium regem timens
astra dum demens petit artibus fisus novis,
certat et veras aves
vincere ac falsis nimis
imperat pinnis paer,

¹ Animos parens A; Heinsius suggests pares, Bücheler feros or truces.
OEDIPUS

Yawn, earth! And do thou, king of the dark world, ruler of shades, to lowest Tartarus hurl this unnatural interchange 'twixt brood and stock. Citizens, heap stones upon my accursed head; slay me with weapons. Let father, let son assail me with the sword; let husbands and brothers arm hands against me, and let the sick populace snatch brands from the pyres and hurl them at me. The crime of the age I wander, hate of the gods, destruction of holy law, the very day I drew the untried air already worthy death. [To himself.] Now be stout of soul, now dare some deed worthy of thy crimes. Go, get thee to the palace with hurrying feet; congratulate thy mother on her house enriched by children. [Exit.

CHORUS

Were it mine to shape fate at my will, I would trim my sails to gentle winds, lest my yards tremble, bent 'neath a heavy blast. May soft breezes, gently blowing, unvarying, carry my untroubled barque along; may life bear me on safely, running in middle course.

While, in fear of the Cretan king, madly the lad sought the stars, in strange devices trusting, and strove to vanquish true birds in flight, and laid his commands on pinions all too false, his name he

1 Icarus.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

nomen eripuit freto.
callidus medium senex Daedalus librans iter
nube sub media stetit,
alitem expectans suam (qualis accipitris minas fugit et sparsos metu conligit fetus avis),
donec in ponto manus
movit implicitas puer
compede audacis viae.
quidquid excessit modum
pendet instabili loco.

Sed quid hoc? postes sonant;
maestus en famulus manu
regius quassat caput.
ede quid portes novi.

NVNTIUS

Praedicta postquam fata et infandum genus dependit ac se scelere convictum Oedipus damnavit ipse, regiam infestus petens invisa proprio tecta penetravit gradu.
qualis per arva Libycus insanit leo,
fulvam minaci fronte concutiens iubam;
vultus furore torvus atque oculi truces,

gemitus et altum murmum, et gelidus fluit
sudor per artus, spumat et volvit minas
ac mersus alte magnus exundat dolor.
secum ipse saevus grande nescio quid parat
suisque fatis simile.

"Quid poenas moror?"

ait "hoc scelestum pectus aut ferro petat,
aut servido aliquis igne vel saxo domet.
quae tigris aut quae saeva visceribus meis

510
robbled the sea of its own name. But shrewd old Daedalus, balancing a middle path, stopped midway of the clouds, awaiting his winged son (as a bird flies the threatening hawk and gathers her scattered and frightened brood), until the boy in the sea plied hands enmeshed in the shackles of his daring flight. Whatsoever exceeds the allotted bounds, hangs in a place unsure.

[Enter a messenger from within the palace.]

But what is this? The doors creak open; behold, a servant of the king, stricken with woe, beats with his hand upon his head. Tell us what news thou bringst.

MESSENER

When Oedipus grasped his foretold fate, and his breed unspeakable, he condemned himself as convicted of the crime and, seeking the palace with deadly purpose, he entered within that hateful roof with hurried step. As over the fields a Libyan lion rages, with threatening front and shaking his tawny mane; so he, his face fierce with passion, with eyes wild staring, with groans and deep mutterings, limbs with cold sweat streaming, froths and threatens, and his mighty, deep-buried anguish overflows. He, raging in soul, plans some monstrous deed to match his destiny.

"Why do I delay punishment?" he cries; "let someone with the sword assail this guilty breast, or overwhelm me with burning fire or stones. What tigress, what ravening bird will pounce upon

---

1 The sea was subsequently called after him the Icarian sea.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

incurret ales? ipse tu scelerum capax, 930
sacer Cithaeron, vel feras in me duas emitte silvis, mitte vel rabidos canes—
nunc redde Agauen. anime, quid mortem times?
mors innocentem sola fortunae eripit.”

Haec fatus aptat impiam capulo manum ensemque ducit. “itane? tam magnis breves poenas sceleribus solvis atque uno omnia pensabis ictu? moreris—hoc patri sat est;
quid deinde matri, quid male in lucem editis
natis, quid ipsi, quae tuum magna luit scelus ruina, flebili patriae dabis?
solvendo non es! illa quae leges ratas Natura in uno vertit Oedipoda, novos commenta partus, supplicis eadem meis novetur. iterum vivere atque iterum mori lieceat, renasci semper ut totiens nova supplicia pendas. utere ingenio, miser;
quod saepe fieri non potest fiat diu—mors eligatur longa. quaeratur via qua nec sepultis mixtus et vivis tamen exemptus erres; morere, sed citra patrem.
cunctaris, anime?”

Subitus en vultus gravat
profusus imber ac rigat fletu genas.
“et flere satis est? hactenus fundent levem oculi liquorem? sedibus pulsi suis lacrimas sequantur. di maritales, satin?
fodiantur oculi!” dixit atque ira furit;
512
my vitals? Do thou thyself, thou all-holding haunt of crime, O curst Cithaeron, send thy wild beasts against me from thy forests, send thy maddened dogs—once more send Agave. O soul, why shrinkst from death? 'Tis death alone saves innocence from fortune.'" 935 With this he lays impious hand on hilt and draws his sword. "So then? With brief suffering like this canst atone for so great crimes, and with one blow wilt pay all debts? Thy death—for thy father 'tis enough; what then to thy mother, what to thy children shamefully begot, what to her who with utter ruin is atoning for thy crime, thy mourning country, wilt thou give? Thou canst not pay! Let that same Nature who in Oedipus alone reverses established laws, devising strange births, be changed anew for my punishment. Be it thine to live again, to die again, ever to be reborn, that at each birth thou mayst pay new penalties. Now use thy wit, poor wretch; let that which may not oft befall, befall thee long—choose thou a lasting death. Search out a way whereon to wander, not mingling with the dead and yet removed from the living; die thou, but reaching not thy sire. Dost hesitate, O soul?"

952 Lo, with sudden shower a flood o'erwhelms his face and waters his cheeks with weeping. "And is it enough to weep? Only thus far shall mine eyes o'erflow with some few drops? Nay, driven from their sockets, let them follow the tears they shed. Ye gods of wedlock, is it enough? These eyes must be dug out!" He speaks and raves with wrath; his

1 Agave in her madness had helped tear Pentheus in pieces.
2 i.e. by mere death. The Latin is the regular phrase for bankruptcy.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

ardent minaces igne truculento genae oculique vix se sedibus retinent suis;
vviolentus audax vultus, iratus ferox,
tantum furentis; ¹ gemuit et dirum fremens manus in ora torsit. at contra truces oculi steterunt et suam intenti manum ultro insecuntur, vulneri occurrunt suo.
scrutatur avidus manibus uncis lumina,
radice ab ima funditus vulsos simul evolvit orbes; haeret in vacuo manus et fixa penitus unguiibus lacerat cavos alte recessus luminum et inanes sinus, saevitque frustra plusque quam satis est furit. ⁹⁶⁰

Factum ² est periclum lucis; attollit caput
cavisque lustrans orbibus caeli plagas noctem experitur. quidquid effossis male dependet oculis rumpit, et victor deos conclamat omnes: “parcite, en, patriae precor;
iam iusta feci, debitas poenas tuli;
inventa thalamis digna nox tandem meis.”
rigat ora foedus imber et lacerum caput largum revulsis sanguinem venis vomit.

CHORVS

Fatis agimur; cedite fatis. ⁹⁸⁰
non sollicitae possunt curae mutare rati stamina fusī.
quidquid patimur mortale genus,
quidquid facimus venit ex alto,
servatque suae decreta colus Lachesis nulla revoluta manu.
omnia secto tramite vadunt

¹ So Richter: A cruentus: Leo with E, eruentis.
² So Leo: furit; tantum ω, corr. Madvig, II. 19.
cheeks burn threatening with ferocious fire, and his eyeballs scarce hold themselves in their place; his face is full of reckless daring and mad savagery, as of one in boundless rage; with groans and dreadful cries, his hands into his eyes he thrusts. But his starting eyes stand forth to meet them and, eagerly following their kindred hands, rush upon their wound. With hooked fingers he greedily searches out his eyes and, torn from their very roots, he drags both eyeballs out; still stay his hands in the empty sockets and, deep fixed, tear with their nails the deep-set hollows of his eyes and empty cavities; vainly he rages, and with excessive fury raves.

The hazard of light is o'er; he lifts his head, surveys the regions of the sky with his empty sockets, and makes trial of the night. The shreds which still hang from eyes unskilfully plucked out he breaks away, and in triumph cries aloud to all the gods: "Spare now my land, I pray you; now have I done justice, I have paid the debt I owed; at last have I found night worthy of my wedlock." A hideous shower drenches his face and his mangled brow spouts streams of blood from his bursting veins.

CHORUS

By fate are we driven; yield ye to fate. No anxious cares can change the threads of its inevitable spindle. Whate'er we mortals bear, whate'er we do, comes from on high; and Lachesis maintains the decrees of her distaff which by no hand may be reversed. All things move on in an appointed path,

1 A Stoic doctrine.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

primusque dies dedit extremum.
on illa deo vertisse licet
quae nexa suis currunt causis.
it cuique ratus prece non ulla
mobilis ordo. multis ipsum metuisse nocet, multi ad fatum venere suum dum fata timent.
Sonuere fores atque ipse suum
duce non ullo luminis orbus molitur iter.

OEDIPVS

Bene habet, peractum est; iusta persolvi patri.
iuvant tenebrae. quis deus tandem mihi
placatus atra nube perfundit caput?

quis scelera donat? conscium evasi diem.
nil, parricida, dexterae debes tuae;
lux te refugit. vultus Oedipodam hic decet.

CHORVS

En ecce, rapido saeva prosiluit gradu
Iocasta vaecors, qualis attonita et furens Cadmea mater abstulit nato caput sensitque raptum. dubitat afflic tum alloqui, cupit pavetque. iam malis cessit pudor.
set haeret ore prima vox.

IOCASTA

Quid te vocem?
natumne? dubitas natus es; natum pudet?
invite loquere, nate—quo avertis caput
vacuosque vultus?

1 So Leo and Richter: censitque E, corr. Σ: sensimve raptum traxit afflictum A.

516
and our first day fixed our last. Those things God may not change which speed on their way, close woven with their causes. To each his established life goes on, unmovable by any prayer. To many their very fear is bane; for many have come upon their doom while shunning doom.

995 The gates have sounded, and he himself, with none to guide and sightless, gropes his way.

[Enter Oedipus.]

OEDIPUS

All's well, 'tis finished; to my father have I paid my debt. How sweet the darkness! What god, at length appeased, has shrouded my head in this dark veil? Who has forgiven my crimes? I have escaped the conscious eye of day. Nothing, thou parricide, dost owe to thy right hand; the light hath fled from thee. This is the face becometh Oedipus.

[Enter Jocasta.]

CHORUS

See, there, with hurried step, frantic, beside herself, Jocasta rushes forth, just as, in frenzied rage, the Cadmean mother tore her son's head away and realized her deed. She hesitates, longs and yet fears to speak to the afflicted one. Now shame has given way to grief; but her first words falter on her lips.

JOCASTA

What shall I call thee? Son? Dost question it? Thou art my son; does "son" shame thee? Though thou wouldst not, speak, my son—why dost thou turn away thy head, thy sightless face?

1 Agave.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

OEDIPVS

Quis frui tenebris vetat?
quis reddit oculos?
matris, en matris sonus!
perdidimus operam.
congredi fas amplius
haut est.
nefandos dividat vastum mare
dirimatque tellus abdita et quisquis sub hoc in alia versus sidera ac solem avium dependet orbis alterum ex nobis ferat.

IOCASTA

Fati ista culpa est; nemo fit fato nocens.

OEDIPVS

Iam parce verbis, mater, et parce auribus, per has reliquias corporis trunci peto,
per inauspicatum sanguinis pignus mei,
per omne nostri nominis fas ac nefas.

IOCASTA

Quid, anime, torpes? socia cur scelerum dare
poenas recusas? omne confusum perit, incesta, per te iuris humani decus.
morere et nefastum spiritum ferro exige.
non si ipse mundum concitans divum sator
corusca saeva tela iaculetur manu, umquam rependam sceleribus poenas pares,
mater nefanda. mors placet; mortis via quae ...
OEDIPUS

Who wills not that I enjoy my darkness? Who restores my eyes? My mother's, lo, my mother's voice! I have worked in vain. 'Tis unlawful that we meet again. Let the vast sea roll between our impious selves, let remote lands separate, and if beneath this world there hangs another, facing other stars and a straying sun, let it take one of us.

JOCASTA

Fate's is that fault of thine: by fate no one is made guilty.

OEDIPUS

Now spare thy words, mother, spare my ears, by these remnants of my mangled body, I beseech thee, by the unhallowed offspring of my blood, by all that in our names is right and wrong.¹

JOCASTA [aside]

Why art benumbed, my soul? Since thou hast shared his guilt, why dost refuse to share his punishment? Through thee, incestuous one, all grace of human law has been confused and lost. Die then, and let out thy impious spirit with the sword. Not if the father of the gods himself, shaking the universe, with deadly hand should hurl his glittering bolts at me, could I ever pay penalty equal to my crimes—I, a mother accurst. Death is my darling wish; let the way of death be sought.

¹ He prays her in the name both of their proper (mother and son) and improper (husband and wife) relations.
SENECAE TRAGOEDIAE

Agedum, commoda matri manum, si parricida es; restat hoc operae ultimum.
Rapiatur ensis; hoc iacet ferro meus coniunx—quid illum nomine haud vero vocas?—socr est. utrumne pectori instigam meo telum an patenti conditum iugulo inprimam? eligere nescis vulnus? hunc, dextra, hunc pete uterum capacem, qui virum et natos tulit.

CHORVS

Iacet perempta. vulneri immoritur manus ferrumque secum nimius eiecit cruor.

OEDIPVS

Fatidice te, te praesidem et veri deum compello. solum debui fatis patrem: bis parricida plusque quam timui nocens matrem peremi; seelere confecta est meo. o Phoebe mendax, fata superavi impia.

Pavitante gressu sequere pallentes vias; suspensa plantis efferens vestigia caecam tremente dextra noctem rege. ingredere praeceps, lubricos ponens gradus, i profuge vade—siste, ne in matrem incidas.

Quicumque fessi corpore et morbo graves semanima trahitis pectora, en fugio exeo; relevate colla. mitior caeli status post terga sequitur. quisquis exilem iacens animam retentat, vividos haustus levis

520
Come, lend thy hand against thy mother, if thou art parricide; this lacks to crown thy work.

Nay, let me seize his sword; by this blade lies slain my husband—nay, why not call him by his true name?—my husband's father. Shall I pierce my breast with this, or thrust it deep into my bared throat? Thou knowest not to choose a place? Strike here, my hand, through this capacious womb, which bore my husband and my sons!

[She stabs herself and falls dead.]

There lies she slain. Her hand dies on the wound, and the sword is driven out by strong streams of blood.

Thee, O fate-revealer, thee, guardian and god of truth, do I upbraid. My father only did I owe the fates; twice parricide and more guilty than I feared, I have slain my mother; for 'tis by my sin that she is done to death. O lying Phoebus, I have outdone the impious fates.

With quaking step pursue thy darkling ways; with faltering feet grope through blind night with apprehensive hand. Make haste, planting uncertain steps, go, speed thee, fly!—but stop, lest thou stumble and fall upon thy mother.

All ye who are weary in body and burdened with disease, whose hearts are faint within you, see, I fly, I leave you; lift your heads. Milder skies come when I am gone. He who, though near to death, still keeps some feeble life, may freely now draw
SENECÆ TRAGOEDIAE

conciptat. ite, ferte depositis opem;
mortifera mecum vitia terrarum extraho.
violenta Fata et horridus Morbi tremor, Maciesque et atra Pestis et rabidus Dolor,

mecum ite, mecum. ducibus his uti libet!
OEDIPUS

deep, life-giving draughts of air. Go, bear ye aid to those given up to death; all pestilential humours of the land I take with me. Ye blasting Fates, thou quaking terror of Disease, Wasting, and black Pestilence, and mad Despair, come ye with me, with me. 'Tis sweet to have such guides.

[Exit.]
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES
OF THE TRAGEDIES IN THIS VOLUME AND
THE CORRESPONDING GREEK DRAMAS
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES

THE GREEK DRAMAS

THE HERCULES FURENS OF EURIPIDES

Prologue.—The old Amphitryon, before the altar of Jupiter, at the entrance of the house of Hercules in Thebes, relates how Hercules has gone to the lower world to bring thence to the realms of day the triple-headed Cerberus. Meanwhile, Lycus, taking advantage of the hero's absence, has slain king Creon and usurped his throne. The father, wife, and children of Hercules he has reduced to poverty, and holds them in durance here in Thebes, threatening to slay the sons,

"Lest, when the boys attain maturer age,
They should avenge their grandsire, Creon's, death."

Amphitryon condoles with Megara, and counsels with her how they may escape the dangers of their present lot.

Parode, or chorus entry.—The chorus of Theban elders, feeble, tottering old men, enters and bemoans the wretched fate that has befallen their city and the household of their prince.

First episode.—Now enters Lycus, the usurper. He insolently taunts his victims on their helplessness, tells them
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES

SENeca's Tragedies

THE HERCULES FURENS OF SENECA

Prologue.—Juno complains that she is fairly driven out of heaven by her numerous rivals, mortal women who have been deified and set in the sky, either they or their offspring, by Jupiter. Especially is her wrath hot against Hercules, against whom she has waged fruitless war from his infancy until now. But he thrives on hardship, and scorns her opposition. She passes in review the hard tasks which she has set him, and all of which he has triumphantly performed. Already is he claiming a place in heaven. He can be conquered only by his own hand. Yes, this shall be turned against him, for a fury shall be summoned up from hell who shall fill his heart with madness; and in this madness shall he do deeds which shall make him long for death.

Parode, or chorus entry.—A vivid picture of the dawning day, when the stars and waning moon fade out before the rising sun; when Toil wakes up and resumes its daily cares; when through the fields the animals and birds are all astir with glad, new life.

But in the cities men awaken to repeat the sordid round of toil, the greedy quest for gold and power. But, whether happily or unhappily, all are speeding down to the world of shades. Even before his time has Hercules gone down to Pluto's realm, and has not yet returned.

First episode.—Megara enters and bewails the fresh woes that are ever ready to meet her husband's home-coming.
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

that Hercules will never return, belittles and scorns the hero's mighty deeds, and announces his intention of killing the sons.

Amphitryon answers the slanders of Lycus against Hercules, and protests against the proposed barbarous treatment of the children, who are innocent of any harm. He reproaches Thebes and all the land of Greece, because they have so ill repaid the services of their deliverer in not coming to the rescue of his wife and children. Lycus gives orders to burn the hated race of Hercules, even where they kneel for refuge at the altar-side; and threatens the elders who would thwart his will, bidding them remember that they are but as slaves in his sight. Yet the old men valiantly defy him, and warn him that they will withstand his attacks upon the children.

But Megara shows them how foolish it is to contend against the king's unbounded power. Let them rather entreat his mercy. Could not exile be substituted for death? But no, for this is worse than death. Rather, let them all die together. Perhaps Lycus will allow her to go into the palace and deck her children in funeral garments? This prayer is granted, though Lycus warns them that they are to die at once. Left alone, Amphitryon chides Jupiter because he does not care for the children of his son:

"Thou know'st not how
To save thy friends. Thou surely art a god, Either devoid of wisdom, or unjust."

First choral interlude.—The chorus sings in praise of the mighty works of Hercules, describing these in picturesque detail, from the destruction of the Nemean lion to his last adventure, which has taken him to the world of shades, whence, alas, he will nevermore return. And meanwhile, lacking his protection, his friends and family are plunged in hopeless misery.

Second episode.—Forth from the palace, all dressed in the garb of death, come Megara and her children. She is ready for the doom which has been pronounced upon them. She sadly recalls the fond hopes that she and her husband had
She recounts the incidents of his long and difficult career, his heroic suffering at Juno's bidding.

And now base Lycus has taken advantage of her husband's absence in the lower world to kill her father, Creon, king of Thebes, and all his sons, and to usurp the throne—

"And Lycus rules the Thebes of Hercules!"

She prays her husband soon to come and right these wrongs, though in her heart she fears that he will never come again.

Old Amphitryon tries to reassure her by recalling the superhuman valour and strength of Hercules, but without success.

Now Lycus appears, boasting of the power which he has gained, not by long descent from a noble line, but by his own valour. But his house cannot stand by valour alone. He must strengthen his power by union with some princely house—he will marry Megara! Should she refuse, he will give to utter ruin all the house of Hercules.

Meeting her at the moment, he attempts with specious arguments to persuade her to his plan. But Megara repulses his monstrous proposition with indignant scorn. Lycus attempts to defend his slaughter of her father and brother as done through the exigency of war, and pleads with her to put away her wrath; but all in vain, and in the end he bids his attendants heap high a funeral pyre on which to burn the woman and all her brood.

When Lycus has retired, Amphitryon in his extremity prays to heaven for aid; but suddenly checks himself with incredulous joy, for he hears approaching the well-known step of Hercules!

First choral interlude.—Verily fortune is unjust, for while Eurystheus sits at ease, the nobler Hercules must suffer unending hardships. His labours are briefly recapitulated. Now has he gone to hell to bring back Cerberus. Oh, that he may conquer death as all things else, and come back again, as did Orpheus by the charm of his lyre.

Second episode.—Hercules enters, fresh from the lower world, rejoicing that he again beholds the light of day, and exulting in the accomplishment of his latest and most difficult task; when suddenly he notices soldiers on guard, cherished for these sons. But these bright prospects have vanished now, for death is waiting to claim them all, herself as well. She will fold them in a last motherly embrace, and pour out her grief:

"How, like the bee with variegated wings,
Shall I collect the sorrows of you all,
And blend the whole together in a flood Of tears exhaustless!"

But perhaps even yet her absent lord has power to intervene in her behalf, though he be but a ghost. She prays despairingly that he will come to aid. Amphitryon would try the favour of Jove once more in this extremity:

"I call on thee, O Jove, that, if thou mean
To be a friend to these deserted children,
Thou interpose without delay and save them;
For soon 'twill be no longer in thy power."

But at this juncture, when no help seems possible from heaven or hell, to their amazed joy Hercules himself appears, and in the flesh. He perceives the mourning garments of his family and the grief-stricken faces of the chorus, and quickly learns the cause of all this woe. He at once plans vengeance upon the wretch who has wrought it all. He has, himself, forewarned by a "bird of evil omen perched aloft," entered Thebes in secret; and now he will hide within his own palace and wait until Lycus comes to fetch the victims whom he has doomed to death. But first he briefly replies to Amphitryon's questions as to the success of his errand to the lower world.

Second choral interlude.—The old men sing in envy of youth and complaint of old age:

"But now a burden on my head Heavier than Aetna's rock, old age, I bear."

They hold that had the gods been wiser they would have given renewed youth as a reward to the virtuous, leaving the degenerate to fall asleep and wake no more. And yet, though oppressed by age, they still may "breathe the strain Mnemosyne inspires," and sing unceasingly the deeds of Hercules:

530
and his wife and children dressed in mourning garments. He asks what these things mean. Amphitryon answers briefly that Lycus has killed Creon and his sons, usurped the throne, and now has doomed Megara and her children to death.

Hercules leaves his home at once to find, and take vengeance on, his enemy, though Theseus, whom he has rescued from the world of shades, begs for the privilege himself of slaying Lycus. Left with Amphithryon, in reply to the latter's questions Theseus gives in great detail an account of the lower world, its way of approach, its topography, and the various creatures who dwell within its bounds. After describing in particular the operations of justice and the punishment of the condemned, he tells how Hercules overcame Cerberus and brought him to the upper world.
"Alcides, the resistless son of Jove,
Those trophies which to noble birth belong
By him are all surpassed; his forceful hand,
Restoring peace, hath cleansed this monster-teeming land."

Third episode.—Lycus enters and encounters Amphitryon without the palace. Him he bids to go within and bring out the victims to their death. To this Amphitryon objects on the ground that it would make him an accomplice in their murder. Whereupon Lycus enters the palace to do his own errand. The old man, looking after him, exclaims:

"Depart; for to that place the fates ordain
You now are on the road";

while the chorus rejoices that now the oppressor is so soon to meet his just punishment. Now the despairing cries of Lycus are heard within and then—silence.

Third choral interlude.—All is now joy and exultation. Fear has departed, hope has come back again, and faith in the protecting care of the gods is restored. Therefore, let all Thebes give herself up to the rapture and triumph of this hour.

But now two spectres are seen hovering over the palace, one of whom introduces herself to the chorus as Iris, the ambassadress of Juno, and announces that her companion is a fiend, daughter of the night. Their mission hither is, at the command of Juno, to drive Hercules into a madness, in which he shall slay his children. The fiend, indeed, makes a weak protest against such a mission, but speedily yields and goes darting into the palace, where we know that she begins at once her deadly work within the breast of Hercules.

The chorus bemoans the city's short-lived joy, and the new and terrible disaster that has fallen upon their hero's house. Soon they hear the mad shouts of Hercules, and know by these that the fiend has already done her fatal work.

Exode.—A messenger hurries out of the palace, and describes the dreadful scenes that have just been enacted
Third episode.—Hercules returns to his house, fresh from the slaying of Lycus, and proceeds to offer sacrifices of thanksgiving to Jupiter. But in the midst of the sacrifice the madness planned by Juno begins to come upon him. His sight is darkened, and his reason changed to delirium. Now he catches sight of his children, cowering in fright; he thinks they are the children of Lycus, immediately lets fly an arrow at one of them, and seizes a second, whom he drags from the scene. Amphitryon, standing where he can see all that takes place, describes the wretched death of the second, and then the third, though Megara tries to save her last remaining child. She also falls before the blow of her husband, who thinks in his madness that she is his cruel stepmother, Juno. Hercules, re-entering, exults in his supposed victory over his enemies, and then sinks down in a deep faint.

Third choral interlude.—The chorus calls upon heaven, earth, and sea to mourn for Hercules in this new disaster that has befallen him. They pray that he may be restored to sanity. In a long apostrophe to Sleep they pray that the soothing influences of this god may hold and subdue him until his former mind returns to its accustomed course. They watch his feverish tossings, and suffer with him in the grief which he so soon must realize. They close with a pathetic lament over the dead children.

Exode.—Hercules wakes up in his right mind, bewildered and uncertain where he is. His eyes fall on the murdered
Hercules was offering sacrifices of purification before Jove's altar, with his three sons and Megara beside him. All was propitious, when suddenly a madness seized on Hercules. He ceased his present sacrifice, declaring that he must first go to Mycenae and kill Eurystheus and his sons, and so make an end of all his enemies at once. In fancy he mounted a chariot and speedily arrived at Mycenae. His own sons seemed to his disordered vision to be Eurystheus' sons; and rushing savagely upon them, he soon had slain them all, and Megara herself. Then did he fall into a deep, swoonlike slumber, prostrate beside a mighty column, to which the attendants tied him securely with cords, lest he should awake and do further mischief.

The palace doors are now thrown open, and the prostrate, sleeping Hercules is seen. Amphitryon warns the chorus not to wake him lest they restore him to his miseries. Soon Hercules awakes, and in his right mind. He seems to himself to have had a dreadful dream. He looks in wonder at the cords which bind his arms, at the fresh-slain corpses lying near, at his own arrows scattered on the floor. He calls aloud for someone to explain these things to him. Amphitryon advances and informs him that in his madness, sent by Juno's hate, he has destroyed his wife and all his sons.

And now Theseus, having heard that Lycus has usurped the throne of Thebes, and grateful for his own deliverance from the world of shades by Hercules, has come with an army of Athenian youth to aid his friend. He is shocked to find the hero sitting in deepest dejection, with head bowed low, and covered with a mourning veil. Quickly he inquires and learns the truth from Amphitryon. With noble and unselfish friendship, he offers his sympathy and help to Hercules, although the latter warns him to avoid the contagion which his own guilty presence engenders. He bids Hercules be a man, and give over his threats of self-destruction.

Hercules gives the reasons why it is impossible for him to live. First, Juno's inveterate hate, which attacked him in his very cradle, pursues him still, relentlessly; but most and worst of all, he has incurred such odium because of the murder of his wife and children that he will be henceforth an outcast on the earth. No land will give him refuge now.
children, though he does not as yet recognize them as his own. He misses his familiar club and bow, and wonders who has been bold enough to remove these and not to fear even a sleeping Hercules. Now he recognizes in the corpses his own wife and children:

"Oh, what sight is this? My sons lie murdered, weltering in their blood; My wife is slain. What Lycus rules the land? Who could have dared to do such things in Thebes, And Hercules returned?"

He notices that Theseus and Amphitryon turn away and will not meet his gaze. He asks them who has slain his family. At last, partly through their half-admissions, and partly through his own surmise, it comes to him that this dreadful deed is his own. His soul reels with the shock, and he prays wildly for death. No attempts of his two friends to palliate his deed can soothe his grief and shame. At last the threat of old Amphitryon instantly to anticipate the death of Hercules by his own leads the hero to give over his deadly purpose.

He consents to live—but where? What land will receive a polluted wretch like him? He appeals to Theseus:

"O Theseus, faithful friend, seek out a place Far off from here where I may hide myself."

Theseus offers his own Athens as a place of refuge, where his friend may find at once asylum and cleansing from his sin:

"My land awaits thy coming; there will Mars Wash clean thy hands and give thee back thy arms. That land, O Hercules, now calls to thee, Which even gods from sin is wont to free."
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

Why should he live? Let him die; and let Juno's cup of happiness be full.

Theseus reminds him that no man escapes unscathed by fate. Nay, even the gods themselves have done unlawful things, and yet live on and do not feel the obloquy their deeds should cause. As for a place of refuge, Athens shall be his home. There shall he obtain full cleansing for his crimes, a place of honour, and ample provision for his wants. All that a generous and grateful friend can give shall be his own.

Hercules accepts this offer of Theseus, reflecting also that he might be charged with cowardice should he give in to his troubles and seek refuge in death. He accordingly takes a mournful farewell of his dead wife and children, commends their bodies to Amphitryon for burial, which it is not lawful for him to give, and so commits himself to the hands of his faithful friend:

"I will follow Theseus,
Towed like a battered skiff. Whoe'er prefers Wealth or dominion to a steadfast friend, Judges amiss."

THE TROADES OF EURIPIDES

Prologue.—Neptune, appearing from the depths of the sea, briefly recounts the story of the overthrow of Troy, which he laments, states the present situation of the Trojan women, dwells upon the especial grief of Hecuba, and places the blame for all this ruin upon Minerva:

"But, oh my town, once flourishing, once crowned With beauteous-structured battlements, farewell!
Had not Minerva sunk thee in the dust,
On thy firm base e'en now thou mightst have stood."

To him appears Minerva, who, though she had indeed helped the Greeks to their final triumph over Troy, had been turned against them by the outrage of Cassandra on the night of Troy's overthrow. She now makes common cause with Neptune, and plans for the harassing of the Greek fleet
THE TROADES OF SENeca

Prologue.—Hecuba bewails the fall of Troy, and draws from it a warning to all who are high in power:

"For of a truth did fortune never show
In plainer wise the frailty of the prop
That doth support a king."

She graphically describes the mighty power and mighty fall of her husband's kingdom, and portrays the awe with which the Greeks behold even their fallen foe. She asserts that the fire by which her city has been consumed sprang from her, the brand that she had dreamed of in her dream before the birth of Paris. She dwells horribly upon the death of Priam, which she had herself witnessed.

"But still the heavenly powers are not appeased."
by storm and flood on the homeward voyage. The Greeks are to be taught a lesson of reverence:

"Unwise is he whoe'er of mortals storms
Beleaguered towns, and crushed in ruins wastes
The temples of the gods, the hallowed tombs
Where sleep the dead; for he shall perish soon."

[The two gods disappear.]

Hecuba, lying prone upon the ground before Agamemnon's tent, gives voice to her sufferings of body and of spirit; laments her accumulated losses of home, friends, station, liberty; blames Helen for all, and calls upon the chorus of captive women to join her in lamentation.

Parade, or chorus entry.—The chorus with Hecuba indulges in speculation as to the place of their future home, speaking with hope of some Greek lands, and deprecating others.

First episode.—Talthybius, the herald, enters and announces that the lots have been drawn, and reveals to each captive her destined lord: that Cassandra has fallen to Agamemnon, Andromache to Pyrrhus, Hecuba to Ulysses. At news of this her fate Hecuba is filled with fresh lamentations, counting it an especial hardship that she should fall to the arch-enemy of her race. The herald also darkly alludes to the already accomplished fate of Polyxena,

"At the tomb raised to Achilles doomed to serve."

Hecuba does not as yet catch the import of these words.

Cassandra now enters, waving a torch, and celebrates in a mad refrain her approaching union with Agamemnon. Hecuba remonstrates with her for her unseemly joy; whereupon Cassandra declares that she rejoices in the prospect of the vengeance upon Agamemnon which is to be wrought out through this union. She contrasts the lot of the Greeks and Trojans during the past ten years, and finds that the latter have been far happier; and even in her fall, the woes of Troy are far less than those that await the Greek chieftains. She then prophesies in detail the trials that await Ulysses, and the dire result of her union with Agamemnon:

"Thou shalt bear me
A fury, an Erinys from this land."
The captives are to be allotted to the Greek chiefs, and even now the urn stands ready for the lots.

Hecuba next calls upon the chorus of Trojan women to join her in lamenting their fallen heroes, Hector and Priam.

_Parode, or chorus entry._—The chorus, under the direction of Hecuba as chorus leader, in true oriental fashion bewails the downfall of Troy, and in particular the death of Priam and Hector.

_First episode._—Talthybius announces that the shade of Achilles has appeared with the demand that Polyxena be sacrificed upon the hero's tomb.

Enter Pyrrhus and Agamemnon, the former demanding that his father's request be carried out, the latter resisting the demand as too barbarous to be entertained. It is finally agreed to leave the decision to Calchas. He is accordingly summoned, and at once declares that only by the death of the maiden can the Greeks be allowed to set sail for home. And not this alone, but Astyanax also must be sacrificed—hurled from the lofty Scaean tower of Troy.
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

Hecuba here falls in a faint and, upon being revived, again recounts her former high estate, sadly contrasts with that her present condition, and shudders at the lot of the slave which awaits her:

"Then deem not of the great
Now flourishing as happy, ere they die."

First choral interlude.—The chorus graphically describes the wooden horse, its joyful reception by the Trojans into the city, their sense of relief from danger, and their holiday spirit; and at last their horrible awakening to death at the hands of the Greeks within the walls.

Second episode.—The appearance of Andromache with Astyanax in her arms, borne captive on a Grecian car, is a signal for general mourning. She announces her own chief cause of woe:

"I, with my child, am led away, the spoil
Of war; th' illustrious progeny of kings,
Oh, fatal change, is sunk to slavery."

Her next announcement comes as a still heavier blow to Hecuba:

"Polyxena, thy daughter, is no more;
Devoted to Achilles, on his tomb,
An offering to the lifeless dead, she fell."

Andromache insists that Polyxena's fate is happier than her own; argues that in death there is no sense of misery:

"Polyxena is dead and of her ills Knows nothing";

while Andromache still lives to feel the keen contrast between her former and her present lot.

Hecuba is so sunk in woe that she can make no protest, but advises Andromache to forget the past and

"honour thy present lord,
And with thy gentle manners win his soul";

540
First choral interlude.—The chorus maintains that all perishes with the body; the soul goes out into nothingness:

"For when within the tomb we’re laid,
No soul remains, no hov’ring shade.
Like curling smoke, like clouds before the blast,
This animating spirit soon has passed."

The evident purpose of these considerations is to discount the story that Achilles’ shade could have appeared with its demand for the death of Polyxena.

Second episode.—Andromache appears with Astyanax and recounts a vision of Hector which she has had, in which her dead husband has warned her to hide the boy away beyond the reach of threatening danger. After discussion with an old man as to the best place of concealment, she hides Astyanax in Hector’s tomb, which is in the near background.

Enter Ulysses, who reluctantly announces that Calchas has warned the Greeks that they must not allow the son of Hector to grow to manhood; for if they do so, the reopening of the Trojan war will be only a matter of time, and the work will have to be done all over again. He therefore asks Andromache to give up the boy to him. Then ensues a war of wits between the desperate mother and the crafty Greek. She affects not to know where the boy is—he is lost. But if she knew, no power on earth should take him from her. Ulysses threatens death, which she welcomes; he threatens torture, which she scorns. She at last states that her son is “among the dead.” Ulysses, taking these words at their face meaning, starts off gladly to tell the news to the Greeks, but suddenly reflects that he has no proof but the mother’s word. He therefore begins to watch Andromache more narrowly, and discovers that her bearing is not that of one who has put her grief behind her, but of one who is still in suspense and fear. To test her, he suddenly calls to his attendants to hunt out the boy. Looking beyond her, he this with the hope that she may be the better able to rear up Astyanax to establish once more some day the walls and power of Troy.

But the heaviest stroke is yet to fall. Talthybius now enters and announces with much reluctance that Ulysses has prevailed upon the Greeks to demand the death of Astyanax for the very reason that he may grow up to renew the Trojan war. The lad is to be hurled from a still standing tower of Troy. The herald warns Andromache that if she resist this mandate she may be endangering the boy's funeral rites. She yields to fate, passionately caressing the boy, who clings fearfully to her, partly realizing his terrible situation. The emotional climax of the play is reached, as she says to the clinging, frightened lad:

"Why dost thou clasp me with thy hands, why hold
My robes, and shelter thee beneath my wings
Like a young bird?"

She bitterly upbraids the Greeks for their cruelty, and curses Helen as the cause of all her woe, and then gives the boy up in an abandonment of defiant grief:

"Here, take him, bear him, hurl him from the height,
If ye must hurl him; feast upon his flesh:
For from the gods hath ruin fall'n on us."

And now what more can happen? Surely the depth of misfortune has been sounded. In the voice of Hecuba:

"Is there an ill
We have not? What is wanting to the woes
Which all the dreadful band of ruin brings?"

Second choral interlude.—The chorus first tells of the former fall of Troy under Hercules and Telamon; and then refers to the high honours that had come to the city through the translation of Ganymede to be the cupbearer of Jove, and through the special grace of Venus. But these have not availed to save the city from its present destruction.

Third episode.—Menelaüs appears, announcing that the Greeks have allotted to him Helen, his former wife, the cause of all this strife, to do with as he will. He declares his intention to take her to Greece, and there destroy her as a warning to faithless wives.
cries: "Good! he's found! bring him to me." Whereat Andromache's agitation proves that the boy is indeed not dead, but in hiding. Where is he hid? Ulysses forces her to choose between the living boy and the dead husband; for, unless her son is forthcoming, Hector's tomb will be invaded and his ashes scattered upon the sea. To her frantic prayer for mercy he says:

"Bring forth the boy—and pray."

Follows a canticum, in which Andromache brings Astyanax out of the tomb and sets him in Ulysses' sight:

"Here, here's the terror of a thousand ships!"

and prays him to spare the child. Ulysses refuses, and, after allowing the mother time for a passionate and pathetic farewell to her son, he leads the boy away to his death.

Second choral interlude.—The chorus discusses the various places to which it may be its misfortune to be carried into captivity. It professes a willingness to go anywhere but to the homes of Helen, Agamemnon, and Ulysses.

Third episode.—Helen approaches the Trojan women, saying that she has been sent by the Greeks to deck Polyxena for marriage with Pyrrhus, this being a ruse to trick the girl into an unresisting preparation for her death. This news Polyxena, though mute, receives with horror.
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

Hecuba applauds this decision, and thinks that at last heaven has sent justice to the earth:

"Dark thy ways
And silent are thy steps to mortal man;
Yet thou with justice all things dost ordain."

Helen, dragged forth from the tent at the command of Menelaus, pleads her cause. She lays the blame for all upon Hecuba and Priam:

"She first, then, to the ills
Gave birth, when she gave Paris birth; and next
The aged Priam ruined Troy and thee,
The infant not destroying, at his birth Denounced a baleful firebrand."

Blame should also fall upon Venus, since through her influence Helen came into the power of Paris.

Hecuba refutes the excuses of Helen. She scouts the idea that Venus brought Paris to Sparta. The only Venus that had influenced Helen was her own passion inflamed by the beauty of Paris:

"My son was with surpassing beauty graced;
And thy fond passion, when he struck thy sight, Became a Venus."

As for the excuse that she was borne away by force, no Spartan was aware of that, no cries were heard. Hecuba ends by urging Menelaus to carry out his threat. This, he repeats, it is his purpose to do.

Third choral interlude.—The chorus sadly recalls the sacred rites in Troy and within the forests of Mount Ida, and grieves that these shall be no more. They lament the untimely death of their warrior husbands, whose bodies have not received proper burial rites, and whose souls are wandering in the spirit-world, while they, the hapless wives, must wander over sea to foreign homes. They pray that storms may come and overwhelm the ships, and especially that Helen may not live to reach the land again.

Exode.—Enter Talthybius, with the dead body of Astyanax borne upon the shield of Hector. He explains that Pyrrhus has hastened home, summoned by news of
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES

Andromache bitterly cries out upon Helen and her marriages as the cause of all their woe. But Helen puts the whole matter to this test:

"Count this true,
If ’twas a Spartan vessel brought me here."

Under the pointed questions of Andromache she gives up deception, and frankly states the impending doom of Polyxena to be slaughtered on Achilles’ tomb, and so to be that hero’s spirit bride. At this the girl shows signs of joy, and eagerly submits herself to Helen’s hands to be decked for the sacrificial rite.

Hecuba cries out at this, and laments her almost utter childlessness; but Andromache envies the doomed girl her fate.

Helen then informs the women that the lots have been drawn and their future lords determined; Andromache is to be given to Pyrrhus, Cassandra to Agamemnon, Hecuba to Ulysses.

Pyrrhus now appears to conduct Polyxena to her death, and is bitterly scorned and cursed by Hecuba.

Third choral interlude.—The chorus enlarges upon the comfort of company to those in grief. Hitherto they have had this comfort; but now they are to be scattered, and each must suffer alone. And soon, as they sail away, they must take their last, sad view of Troy, now but a smouldering heap; and mother to child will say, as she points back to the shore:

"See, there’s our Troy, where smoke curls high in air,
And thick, dark clouds obscure the distant sky."

Exode.—The messenger relates with much detail to Hecuba, Andromache, and the rest the circumstances of the death of Astyanax and Polyxena: how crowds of insurrection in his own kingdom, and has taken Andromache with him. He delivers Andromache's request to Hecuba that she give the boy proper burial, and use the hollow shield as a casket for the dead.

Hecuba and the chorus together weep over the shield, which recalls Hector in his days of might, and over the poor, bruised body of the dead boy; sadly contrasting his former beauty with this mangled form. They then wrap it in such costly wrappings as their state allows, place him upon the shield, and consign him to the tomb.

Talthybius then orders bands of men with torches to burn the remaining buildings of Troy; and in the light of its glaring flames and with the crashing sound of its falling walls in their ears, Hecuba and her companions make their way to the waiting ships, while the messenger urges on their lagging steps.

THE MEDEA OF EURIPIDES

Prologue.—The old nurse of Medea, alone upon the stage, laments that the Argo was ever framed, and that Medea had ever fled from Colchis. Then had she never been here in Corinth an exile and now deserted even by her husband, Jason. In describing Medea's distracted condition, the nurse first voices the fear of that violence which forms the catastrophe of the play. Enter an old attendant with the two sons of Medea, who announces a new woe—that Creon, the king, has decreed the banishment of Medea and her children. The nurse repeats her warning note, and urges the attendant to keep the children out of the sight of their mother, who even now can be heard raving within, and vowing the destruction of her children and her husband. The attendant retires with the children.

Parode, or chorus entry.—The chorus of Corinthian women comes to the front of the palace to inquire the cause of Medea's cries, which they have heard, and to profess their attachment to her. From time to time Medea's voice can be heard from within as she prays for death and calls down curses upon Jason. The nurse, at the suggestion of the chorus, undertakes to induce her mistress to come forth, that converse with her
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES

Greeks and Trojans witnessed both tragedies, how both sides were moved to tears at the sad sight, and how both victims met their death as became their noble birth.

Andromache bewails and denounces the cruel death of her son, and sadly asks that his body be given her for burial; but she is told that this is mangled past recognition.

But Hecuba, having now drained her cup of sorrow to the dregs, has no more wild cries to utter; she almost calmly bids the Grecians now set sail, since nothing bars their way. She longs for death, complaining that it ever flees from her, though she has often been so near its grasp.

The messenger interrupts, and bids them hasten to the shore and board the ships, which wait only their coming to set sail.

THE MEDEA OF SENeca

Prologue.—Medea, finding herself deserted by Jason, calls upon gods and furies to grant her vengeance. She prays for destruction to light upon her rival, and calls down curses upon Jason. She thinks it monstrous that the sun can still hold on his way, and prays for power to subvert the whole course of nature. She finally realises that she is impotent save as she has recourse to her old sorceries, which she has long since laid aside, and resolves upon them as a means of revenge.

Parode, or chorus entry.—A chorus of Corinthians chants an epithalamium for the nuptials of Jason and Creïisa. First, in Asclepiadean strains, they invoke the gods to be present and bless the nuptials. The strain then changes to quick, joyful Glyconics in praise of the surpassing beauty of the married pair. Changing back to Asclepiads, the chorus continues in extravagant praise of Jason and his bride, friends may soothe her grief. The nurse goes within, leaving the chorus alone upon the stage.

First episode.—Medea comes forth from the palace to explain to the chorus her position and unhappy condition. She deplores the lot of women in general, and especially in relation to marriage, and enlists the sympathy of the chorus in her attempt to secure some revenge for her wrongs. They confess the justice of her cause and promise to keep her secret.

Creon announces to Medea that she must leave his realm at once, for much he fears that she will take her revenge upon him and upon his house. She pleads for grace, and bewails her reputation for magic power; she assures the king that he has nothing to fear from her, and affects compliance with all that has taken place. Creon, while still protesting that she cannot be trusted, yields in so far that he grants her a single day's delay.

Medea tells the chorus that her recent compliance was only feigned, and openly announces her intention before the day is done of slaying Creon, his daughter, and Jason. She debates the various methods by which this may be accomplished, and decides, for her own greater safety, upon the help of magic.

First choral interlude.—The course of nature is subverted. No longer let woman alone have the reputation for falsehood; man's insincerity equals hers. In poetry the fickleness of both should be sung, just as in history it is seen. Though Medea, for her love of Jason, left her native land and braved all the terrors of the deep, she is now left all forsaken and alone. Verily truth and honour have departed from the earth.

Second episode.—Jason reproaches Medea for her intemperate speech against the king, which has resulted in her banishment, and shows her that he is still concerned for her interests. She retorts with reproaches because of his ingratitude, and proceeds to recount all that she had done for him and given up in his behalf. Jason replies that it was not through her help, but that of Venus, that he had escaped all the perils of the past, and reminds her of the advantages which she herself had gained by leaving her barbarous land.
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES

congratulates him on his exchange from Medea to Creüsa, and finally, in six lines of hexameter, exults in the licence of the hour.

First episode.—Hearing the epithalamium, Medea goes into a passion of rage. She recounts all that she has done for Jason, and exclaims against his ingratitude. Again, with shifting feelings she pleads Jason's cause to herself and strives to excuse him, putting all the blame upon Creon. Upon him she vows the direst vengeance. Meanwhile the nurse in vain urges prudence.

Creon now enters, manifesting in his words a fear of Medea, and bent upon her immediate banishment. Medea pleads her innocence, and begs to know the reason for her exile. She reviews at length her former regal estate and contrasts with this her present forlorn condition. She claims the credit for the preservation of all the Argonautic heroes. Upon this ground she claims that Jason is hers. She begs of Creon some small corner in his kingdom for her dwelling, but the king remains obdurate. She then prays for a single day's delay in which to say farewell to her children, who are to remain the wards of the king. This prayer Creon reluctantly grants.

First choral interlude.—Apropos of Medea's reference to the Argonautic heroes the chorus sings of the dangers which those first voyagers upon the sea endured; how the natural bounds which the gods set to separate the lands have now been removed—and all this for gold and this barbarian woman. (The chorus is nowhere friendly to Medea, as in Euripides.) The ode ends with a prophecy of the time when all the earth shall be revealed, and there shall be no "Ultima Thule."

Second episode.—Medea is rushing out to seek vengeance, while the nurse tries in vain to restrain her. The nurse soliloquizes, describing the wild frenzy of her mistress, and expressing grave fears for the result. Medea, not noticing the nurse's presence, reflects upon the day that has been granted her by Creon, and vows that her terrible vengeance shall be commensurate with her sufferings. She rushes off the stage, while the nurse calls after her a last warning.

Jason now enters, lamenting the difficult position in which THE TRAGEDIES OF SENЕCA

for Greece. He even holds that his marriage into the royal family of Corinth is in her interest and that of her children, since by this means their common fortunes will be mended. He offers her from his new resources assistance for her exile, which she indignantly refuses, and Jason retires from her bitter taunts.

Second choral interlude.—The chorus prays to be delivered from the pangs of immoderate love and jealousy, from exile, and the ingratitude of friends.

Third episode.—Aegeus, in Corinth by accident, recognizes Medea, and learns from her her present grievous condition and imminent exile. She begs him to receive her into his kingdom as a friend under his protection. This he promises with a mighty oath to do.

Medea, left alone with the chorus, explains to it still more in detail her plans. She will send her sons with gifts to the new bride, which, by their magic power, will destroy her and all who touch her. She adds that she will also slay her two sons, the more to injure Jason. The chorus, while protesting against this last proposal, offers no resistance.
he finds himself. He asserts that it is for his children’s sake that he has done all, and hopes to be able to persuade Medea herself to take this view. Medea comes back, and at sight of Jason her fury is still further inflamed. She announces her intended flight. But whither shall she flee? For his sake she has closed all lands against herself. In bitter sarcasm she accepts all these sufferings as her just punish-ment. Then in a flash of fury she recalls all her services to him and contrasts his ingratitude. She shifts suddenly to passionate entreaty, and prays him to pity her, to give back all that she gave up for him, if she must needs flee; she begs him to brave the wrath of Creon and flee with her, and promises him her protection as of old. In a long series of quick, short passages they shift from phase to phase of feeling, and finally Medea prays that in her flight she may have her children as her comrades. Jason’s refusal shows how deeply he loves his sons, and here is suggested to Medea for the first time the method of her direst revenge. Jason now yields to her assumed penitence and grants her the custody of the children for this day alone. When Jason has with-drawn, she bids the nurse prepare the fatal robe which she proposes to send to her rival by the hands of her children.

Second choral interlude.—The chorus opens on the text, “Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned,” and continues with a prayer for Jason’s safety. It then recounts the sub-sequent history of the individual Argonauts, showing how almost all came to some untimely end. They might indeed be said to deserve this fate, for they volunteered to assist in that first impious voyage in quest of the golden fleece; but Jason should be spared the general doom, for the task had been imposed upon him by his usurping uncle, Pelias.

Third episode.—The nurse in a long monologue recites Medea’s magic wonders of the past, and all her present preparations. Then Medea’s voice is heard, and presently she comes upon the stage chanting her incantations. She summons up the gods of Tartara to aid her task; recounts all the wonders which her charms can work; describes her store of magic fires and other potent objects. Then breaking into quicker measure, as if filled with a fuller frenzy, she continues her incantations, accompanied by wild cries and gestures. She finally dispatches her sons to Jason’s bride with the robe she has anointed with her magic drugs.
Third choral interlude.—The chorus, dwelling upon Medea’s proposed place of refuge, sings the praises of Athens, sacred to the Muses. It contrasts with this holy city the dreadful deed which Medea intends, and again vainly strives to dissuade her.

Fourth episode.—Medea, sending for Jason, with feigned humility reproaches herself for her former intemperate words to him, and begs only that he use his influence for the reprieve of their children from exile. To assist him in this, she proposes to send the children themselves, bearing a gorgeous robe of golden tissue (which she has anointed with magic poison) as a wedding present to the bride. Upon this errand Jason retires, attended by his little sons.

Fourth choral interlude.—The chorus, with full knowledge of the fatal robe, pictures the delight of the bride at its reception, and laments her fearful doom.

Fifth episode.—This episode is in four parts.

The attendant returns with the children and announces to Medea that her gifts have prevailed for their reprieve. (The attendant retires.)

Medea contrasts the assured career of her children with her own hapless condition; then remembers her resolve and with softening heart laments their dreadful fate. She hastily sends them within the palace. Left alone, she again struggles between her mother-love and her resolve not to leave her children subject to the scorn of her foes. (She here leaves the stage to wait for tidings from the royal house.)

Then follows a monologue by the chorus leader discussing the advantages of childlessness. No reference is made to the passing events.

Medea returns just in time to meet a messenger who breathlessly announces the death of Creon and his daughter. At the request of Medea he gives a detailed account of the reception of the magic robe and crown, the bride’s delight, and her sudden and awful death, in which her father also was involved. He urges Medea to fly at once. She announces her intention to do so as soon as she has slain her children; and then rushes into the house.
and charged with her curses. She hastens out in the opposite direction.

Third choral interlude.—The chorus notes and describes Medea's wild bearing, and prays for her speedy departure from their city.
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENeca

Fifth choral interlude.—This consists of a single strophe and antistrophe in which the chorus calls upon the gods to restrain Medea's mad act. Then are heard within the house the shrieks first of the two children, then of one, then silence, the chorus meanwhile wildly shouting to Medea to desist from her deadly work.

The exode.—Jason appears in search of Medea that he may avenge on her the death of the royal pair; but most he fears for his children. The chorus informs him that they are already slain within the palace by their mother's hand. He prepares to force an entrance into the house.

But now Medea appears in a chariot drawn by dragons. She defies Jason's power to harm her. Jason replies by reproaching her with all the murderous deeds of her life, which have culminated in this crowning deed of blood. She in turn reproaches him and his ingratitude as the cause of all. A storm of mutual imprecations follows, and Medea disappears with the bodies of her two sons, denying to Jason even the comfort of weeping over their remains.

---

THE HIPPOLYTUS OF EURIPIDES

Prologue.—Venus complains that Hippolytus alone of all men sets her power at naught and owns allegiance to her rival, Diana. She announces her plan of revenge: that Phaedra shall become enamoured of her stepson, that Theseus shall be made aware of this and in his rage be led to slay his son. If Phaedra perish too, it will but add to the triumph of the goddess' slighted power.

Hippolytus comes in from the chase and renders marked homage to Diana. He is warned by an aged officer of the palace "to loathe that pride which studies not to please." Inquiring the meaning of this warning, he is told to recognize the presence of Venus, too, and to include her in his devotions; but from this advice he turns away in scorn.

554
The exode.—A messenger comes running in from the direction of the palace, and announces that the king and his daughter are dead. The eager questions of the chorus bring out the strange circumstances attending this catastrophe. Medea enters in time to hear that her magic has been successful, and ignoring the nurse's entreaties to flee at once, she becomes absorbed in her own reflections. And now in her words may be seen the inward struggle between maternal love and jealous hate as she nerves herself for the final act of vengeance. The purpose to kill her children grows upon her, resist it as she may, until in an ecstasy of madness, urged on by a vision of her murdered brother, she slays her first son; and then, bearing the corpse of one and leading the other by the hand, she mounts to the turret of her house. Here with a refinement of cruelty she slays the second son in Jason's sight, disregarding his abject prayers for the boy's life. Now a chariot drawn by dragons appears in the air. This Medea mounts and is borne away, while Jason shouts his impotent curses after her.

---

THE HIPPOLYTUS OF SENeca

Prologue.—Hippolytus, in hunting costume, appears in the court of the palace, which is filled with huntsmen bearing nets and all sorts of hunting weapons, and leading dogs in leash. The young prince, in a long rambling speech, assigns places for the hunt, and their duties to his various servants and companions. He ends with an elaborate ascription of praise to his patroness Diana, as goddess of the chase, and with a prayer to her for success in his own present undertaking. The whole speech is in lyric strain, the anapaestic measure, most commonly employed by Seneca.
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

Parade, or chorus entry.—The chorus of Troezenian women deplores the strange malady that has befallen the young queen. They relate how

“This is the third revolving day
Since, o'erpowered by lingering pains,
She from all nourishment abstains,
Wasting that lovely frame with slow decay.”

At the conclusion of the lyric part of the chorus, the queen, closely veiled, in company with her aged nurse, is seen coming from the palace gates.

First episode.—Full of anxiety, the nurse strives to indulge her mistress' every whim. Phaedra answers feebly at first, but suddenly, to the amazement of her companion, her speech is filled with the language of the chase, and she again relapses into her mute lethargy. At last, under the insistence of the nurse to probe her mystery, Phaedra confesses that the wretched fate of her house pursues her, too, and that she now feels the torments of love; and though she does not speak his name, the truth at last is clear that Hippolytus is the object of her passion. The nurse recoils in horror and shame from this confession.

Phaedra describes how she has struggled against her unhappy love, but in vain, and is now resolved on death in order to save her honour. At this the nurse throws all her influence in the opposite scale, arguing that, after all, the sway of Venus is universal, that it is only human to love, and that this is no reason for casting away one's life. She even proposes to acquaint Hippolytus with her mistress' feelings, and strive to win his love in return. This proposal Phaedra indignantly rejects. The nurse then offers to fetch from the house certain philtres which will cure the queen of her malady. The queen reluctantly consents to this, and the nurse retires into the palace.

556
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES

Parode, or chorus entry.—The technical chorus entry is entirely lacking in this play. While the chorus may be assumed to have entered and to have been present during the long interview between Phaedra and her nurse, which forms the first episode, still its presence is in no way manifested until the end of this interview.

First episode.—Phaedra bewails her present lot, in that she has been forced to leave her native Crete, and live in wedlock with her father’s enemy. And even he has now deserted her, gone to the very realms of Dis, in company with a madcap friend, to seduce and bear away the gloomy monarch’s queen. But a worse grief than this is preying on her soul. She feels in her own heart the devastating power of unlawful love, which has already destroyed all the natural interests of her life. She recalls her mother’s unhappy passion; but this was bearable compared with her own. For Venus has, from deadly hatred of her family, filled her with a far more hopeless love. She does not name the object of her passion, but from her guarded references it is clear that Hippolytus, her stepson, is meant.

The nurse urges her mistress to drive this passion from her breast, moralizing upon the danger of delay. Has not her house already known sinful love enough? Such love is dangerous, for it cannot long be hid. Granting that Theseus may never return to earth, can her sin be concealed from her father? from her grandsires, both gods of heaven? And what of her own conscience? Can she ever be happy or at peace with such a sin upon her soul? She pictures her mistress’ passion in all its hideousness. Besides, it is most hopeless, since Hippolytus, woman-hater that he is, can never be brought to respond to it. Phaedra yields to these arguments and entreaties of the nurse, and says that now she is resolved upon death as her only refuge. Here-upon the nurse (the usual rôle) begs her not to take this desperate course, and undertakes to bend Hippolytus to their will.
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

First choral interlude.—The chorus prays that love may never come upon its breast with immoderate power, and relates instances of the resistless sway of Venus and her son.

Second episode.—Phaedra, standing near the doors of the palace, suddenly becomes agitated, and utters despairing cries. The chorus, inquiring the cause of these, is told to listen. At first there is only a confused murmur from within; but this soon resolves itself into the angry denunciations of Hippolytus and the pleading tones of the nurse. By these Phaedra learns that the nurse has indeed revealed the fatal secret to Hippolytus under an oath that he will not betray the truth to anyone, and that the youth has received the announcement with horror and scorn. He breaks forth into bitter reproaches against all womankind. He regrets that his lips are sealed by his oath, else would he straightway reveal to Theseus all his wife’s unfaithfulness.

Phaedra, on her side, reproaches the nurse for betraying her secret. She angrily dismisses her, and, after exacting an oath of silence from the chorus, goes out, reiterating her resolve to die, and suggests that she has one expedient left by which her name may be preserved from infamy and her sons from dishonour.

Second choral interlude.—The chorus prays to be wafted far away from these scenes of woe; and laments that the hapless queen had ever come from Crete, for then she would not now be doomed by hopeless love to self-inflicted death.

558
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES

First choral interlude.—The chorus sing at length upon the universal and irresistible sway of love.

Second episode.—On the inquiry of the chorus as to how the queen is faring, the nurse describes the dreadful effect which this malady of love has already produced upon her. Then the palace doors open, and Phaedra is seen, reclining upon a couch, attended by her tiring women. She rejects all the beautiful robes and jewels which they offer, and desires to be dressed as a huntress, ready for the chase.

The nurse prays to Diana to conquer the stubborn soul of Hippolytus and bend his heart toward her mistress. At this moment the youth himself enters and inquires the cause of the nurse's distress.

Thereupon ensues a long debate, in which the nurse chides Hippolytus for his austere life and argues that the pleasures of life were meant to be enjoyed, and that no life comes to its full fruition unless youth is given free rein. The young man replies by a rhapsody on the life of the woods, so full of simple, wholesome joys, and so free from all the cares of life at court and among men. He compares this with the Golden Age, and traces the gradual fall from the innocence of that time to the abandoned sin of the present. He concludes with laying all the blame for this upon woman.

Phaedra now comes forth, and, seeing Hippolytus, falls fainting, but is caught in the young man's arms. He attempts to reassure her and inquires the cause of her evident grief. After much hesitation, she at last confesses her love for him and begs him to pity her. With scorn and horror he repulses her and starts to kill her with his sword; but, deciding not so to stain his sword, he throws the weapon away and makes off toward the forest.

The nurse now plans to save her mistress by inculpating Hippolytus. She accordingly calls loudly for help, and tells the attendants who come rushing in that the youth has attempted an assault upon the queen, and shows his sword in evidence.

Second choral interlude.—The chorus dwells upon and praises the beauty of Hippolytus, and discourses upon the theme that beauty has always been a dangerous possession, citing various mythological instances in proof of this.
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

Third episode.—A messenger hurriedly enters with the announcement that the queen has destroyed herself by the noose. The chorus, though grieved, manifests no surprise at this, and is divided as to a plan of action. And now enters Theseus, who demands the cause of the lamentations of the servants, which may be heard from within the palace. He learns from the chorus the fact and manner, but not the cause, of Phaedra’s death.

The palace doors are now thrown open and the shrouded body of the queen is discovered within. Theseus, in an agony of lamentations, seeks to know the cause of his queen’s death. He at length discovers a letter clasped in her dead hand, by which he is informed that Phaedra has slain herself in grief and shame because her honour has been violated by the king’s own son, Hippolytus. Thereupon Theseus curses his son, and calls on Neptune to destroy him, offering this as one of the three requests which, in accordance with the promise of the god, should not be denied.

Here enters Hippolytus, hearing the sound of his father’s voice. He looks in amazement upon the corpse of Phaedra, and begs his father to explain her death. Theseus, supposing that his son conceals a guilty conscience, makes no direct answer, but inveighs against the specious arts of man. This strange speech, and still more the manner of his father, now show Hippolytus that he himself is connected in his father’s mind with Phaedra’s death; and he seeks to know who has thus calumniated him. The wrath of Theseus now breaks over all bounds. He charges his son with the dishonour and murder of his wife, and with withering scorn taunts him with his former professions of purity. Hippolytus protests his innocence, but Theseus continues obdurate, and produces the fatal letter in proof of his statements. Then the youth realizes the terrible mesh of circumstances in which he is taken; but, bound by his oath of secrecy, he endures in silence. After Theseus has pronounced the doom of exile upon him, and retired within the gates, he himself goes forth to seek his comrades and acquaint them with his fate.

Third choral interlude.—The chorus reflects upon the precarious life of man, lauds the golden mean, and prays for the blessings of life without conspicuous fame. No man can hope for continued security in life, when such a youth as Hippolytus is driven off by Theseus’ ire. It laments that no
Third episode.—Theseus, just returned to earth from Hades, and with all the horrors of the lower world still upon him, briefly refers to his dreadful experiences and his escape by the aid of Hercules. Then, hearing the sounds of lamentation, he asks the cause. He is told by the nurse that Phaedra, for some reason which she will not disclose, has resolved on immediate self-destruction. Rushing into the palace, he encounters Phaedra just within. After urgent entreaties and threats from Theseus, she confesses that she is determined to die in order to remove the stain upon her honour; and without mentioning the name of him who has ruined her, she shows the sword which Hippolytus has left behind in his flight. This is at once recognized by Theseus, who flies into a wild passion of horror, rage, and bitter scorn. He vows dire vengeance upon his son, which shall reach him wherever he may flee; and ends by claiming from Neptune, as the third of the boons once granted him, that the god will destroy Hippolytus.

Third choral interlude.—The chorus complains that while nature is so careful to maintain the order of the heavenly bodies, the atmospheric phenomena, the seasons, and the productiveness of wealth, for the affairs of men alone she has no care. These go all awry. Sin prospers and righteousness is longer will his steeds, his lyre, his wonted woodland haunts know the well-loved youth; and reproaches the gods that they did not better screen their guiltless votary.

Exode.—The last words of the chorus are interrupted by the approach of a messenger, who hastily inquires for the king. As the latter comes forth from the palace the messenger announces the death of his son. At the king's request he gives a detailed account of the disaster: how Hippolytus was driving his fiery coursers along the shore, when Neptune sent a monstrous bull from out the sea, which drove the horses to a panic of fear; how the car was at length dashed against a ragged cliff, and Hippolytus dragged, bruised and bleeding, by the maddened horses; how, though yet living, he could not long survive. Theseus expresses pleasure at his son's sufferings, and bids that he be brought into his presence that he may behold his punishment.

The chorus interjects a single strophe, acknowledging Venus as the unrivalled queen of heaven and earth.

Diana now appears to Theseus and reveals to him the whole truth, explaining the infatuation of the queen, the fatal letter, and the wiles of Venus. The father is filled with horror and remorse. Diana tells him that he may yet hope for pardon for his sin, since through the wiles of Venus, which she herself could not frustrate, the deed was done.

Here the dying Hippolytus is borne in by his friends. In his agony he prays for death; but by the voice of his loved goddess he is soothed and comforted. After a touching scene of reconciliation between the dying prince and his father, the youth perishes, leaving Theseus overcome with grief.
in distress. Verily, it does not at all profit a man to strive to live uprightly, since all the rewards of life go to the vain and profligate. While the case of Hippolytus is not mentioned, it is clearly in mind throughout.

Exode.—A messenger, hurrying in, announces to Theseus the death of his son. Theseus receives the news calmly and asks for a detailed account. The messenger relates how Hippolytus had yoked his horses to his car and was driving madly along the highway by the sea, when suddenly the waves swelled up and launched a strange monster in the form of a bull upon the land. This monster charged upon Hippolytus, who fronted the beast with unshaken courage. But in the end the horses became unmanageable through fright, and dragged their master to his death among the rocks. The body of the hapless Hippolytus has been torn in pieces and scattered far and wide through the fields; and even now attendants are bringing these in for burning on the pyre. Theseus laments, not because his son is dead, but because it is through his, the father’s, act.

The chorus expatiates upon the fact that the blows of fate fall heavily upon men of exalted condition, but spare the humble. The great Theseus, once a mighty monarch, but now so full of woe, is an example of this truth. It has not profited him to escape from Hades, since now his son has hastened thither.

But now their attention is turned to Phaedra, who appears, wailing aloud, and with a drawn sword in hand. She rails at Theseus as the destroyer of his house, weeps over the mangled remains of Hippolytus, confesses to Theseus that her charge against his son was false, and ends by falling upon the sword. Theseus, utterly crushed by the weight of woe that has fallen upon him, prays only that he may return to the dark world from which he has just escaped.

The chorus reminds him that he will find ample time for mourning, and that he should now pay due funeral honours to his son. Whereat Theseus bids all the fragments be hunted out and brought before him. These he fits together as best he can, lamenting bitterly as each new gory part is brought to him.

He ends by giving curt command for the burial of Phaedra, with a prayer that the earth may rest heavily upon her.
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

THE OEDIPUS OF SOPHOCLES

Prologue.—Dialogue between Oedipus and the priest of Zeus, who discloses the present plague-smitten condition of the people, and prays the king for aid since he is so wise. The fatherly regard of Oedipus for his people, in that he has already sent a messenger to ask the aid of the oracle, is portrayed.

The answer of the oracle: first reference to an unexpiated sin. Short question and answer between Oedipus and Creon, the messenger, bringing out the facts of Laïus’ death.

The irony of fate: Oedipus proposes, partly in his own interest, to seek out the murderer. As yet there is no foreshadowing of evil in the king’s mind. At the end of the prologue Oedipus remains alone upon the stage.

Parode, or chorus entry.—The chorus enlarges upon the distresses of the city, and appeals to the gods for aid.

First episode.—The curse of Oedipus upon the unknown murderer is pronounced, and the charge is made by Tiresias (who long refuses to speak, but is forced to do so by Oedipus), “Thou art the man.” Oedipus’ explanation of Tiresias’ charge: it is a plot between the latter and Creon. The facts of Oedipus’ birth are hinted at. Tiresias prophesies the after-life of the king, with the name but thinly veiled.
COMPARATIVE ANALYSES

THE OEDIPUS OF SENECA

Prologue.—In the early morning Oedipus is seen lamenting the plague-smitten condition of his people. He narrates how he had fled from Corinth to avoid the fulfilment of a dreadful oracle, that he should kill his father and wed his mother. Even here he cannot feel safe, but still fears some dreadful fate that seems threatening. He describes with minute detail the terrors of the pestilence which has smitten man and beast and even the vegetable world. He prays for death that he may not survive his stricken people. Jocasta remonstrates with him for his despair and reminds him that it is a king's duty to bear reverses with cheerfulness.

Parode, or chorus entry.—The chorus appeals to Bacchus, relating how the descendants of his old Theban comrades are perishing. It enlarges upon the distresses of the city, and deplores the violence of the plague. The sufferings of the people are described in minute detail.

First episode.—Creon, returned from the consultation of the oracle at Delphi, announces that the plague is caused by the unatoned murder of Laius, former king of Thebes. Oedipus anxiously inquires who the murderer is, but is told that this is still a mystery. Creon describes the scene at Delphi in the giving of the oracle. Oedipus declares himself eager to hunt out the murderer and inquires why the matter has been left so long uninvestigated. He is told that the terrors of the Sphinx had driven all other thoughts out of the people's mind.

The irony of fate: Oedipus pronounces a dreadful curse upon the murderer of Laius and vows not to rest until he finds him. He inquires where the murder took place and how. At this moment the blind old Tiresias enters, led by his daughter, Manto. Tiresias tries by the arts of divination (which are described with the greatest elaboration) to ascertain the name of the murderer, but without avail; and says that recourse must be had to necromancy, or the raising of the dead.
First choral interlude.—The chorus reflects upon the oracle and the certain discovery of the guilty one. Ideal picture of the flight of the murderer. While troubled by the charge of Tiresias, the chorus still refuses to give it credence. After all, the seer is only a man and liable to be mistaken. Oedipus has shown himself a wiser man by solving the riddle of the Sphinx.

Second episode.—Quarrel of Oedipus and Creon based upon the charges of the former. Oedipus' argument: The deed was done long ago, and Tiresias, though then also a seer, made no charge. Now, when forced by the recent oracle, the seer comes forward with Creon. This looks like a conspiracy. Creon pleads for a fair and complete investigation. Jocasta tries to reconcile the two, but in vain, and Creon is driven out. Jocasta relates the circumstances of Laius' death, which tally in all details but one with the death of one slain by Oedipus. A terrible conclusion begins to dawn upon the king. He tells his queen the story of his life and the dreadful oracle, the fear of the fulfilment of which drove him from Corinth. At the end of this episode the death of Laius at the hands of Oedipus is all but proved, but the relation between the two is not yet hinted at.

Second choral interlude.—Prayer for a life in accordance with the will of heaven. Under the shadow of impending ill, the chorus seeks the aid of God, meditates upon the doom of the unrighteous, and considers the seeming fallibility of the oracle.

Third episode.—A messenger from Corinth brings the news of Polybus' death, the supposed father of Oedipus. The irony of fate: the king is lifted up with joy that now the oracle cannot be fulfilled that he should kill his own father. Step by step the details of the king's infancy come out, which reveal the awful truth to Jocasta. To Oedipus the only result of the present revelation is that he is probably base-born. Jocasta tries to deter Oedipus from further investigation.

Strophe and antistrophe.—A partial interlude, while they wait for the shepherd who is to furnish the last link in the chain of evidence. The chorus conjectures as to the wonderful birth of Oedipus; possibly his father is Pan, or Apollo, or Mercury, or Bacchus.
First choral interlude.—The chorus sings a dithyrambic strain in praise of the wonderful works of Bacchus. No reference is made to the tragedy which is in progress.

Second episode.—Creon returns from the rites of necromancy in which he had accompanied Tiresias, and strives to avoid telling the result of the investigation to the king. Being at last forced to reveal all that he knows, he describes with great vividness of detail how Tiresias has summoned up the spirits of the dead, and among them Laius. The latter declares that Oedipus himself is the murderer, having slain his father and married his mother. Oedipus, strong in the belief that Polybus and Merope of Corinth are his parents, denies the charge, and after a hot dispute orders Creon to be cast into prison, on suspicion of a conspiracy with Tiresias to deprive Oedipus of the sceptre.

Second choral interlude.—The chorus refuses to believe the charge against Oedipus, but lays the blame of all these ills upon the evil fate of Thebes which has pursued the Thebans from the first.

Third episode.—Oedipus, remembering that he had slain a man on his way to Thebes, questions Jocasta more closely as to the circumstances of Laius’ death, and, finding these circumstances to tally with his own experience, is convinced that he was indeed the slayer of Laius.

At this point a messenger from Corinth, an old man, announces to Oedipus the death of Polybus, the king of Corinth, and the supposed father of Oedipus. The latter is summoned to the empty throne of Corinth. A quick succession of questions and answers brings to light the fact that Oedipus is not the child of Polybus and Merope, but that the messenger himself had given him when an infant to the Corinthian pair. This announcement removes the chief support of Oedipus against the charges of Tiresias, and now
THE TRAGEDIES OF SENECA

The shepherd, arriving, also seeks to keep the dreadful truth from the king, but a second time the passion of Oedipus forces the truth from an unwilling witness. At last the whole story comes out, and Oedipus realizes that he has slain his father and wed his mother.

Third choral interlude.—The utter nothingness of human life, judged by the fate of Oedipus, who above all men was successful, wise, and good. It is inscrutable; why should such a fate come to him? The chorus laments the doom of the king as its own.

Exode.—The catastrophe in its final manifestations. A messenger describes the lamentations and suicide of Jocasta, the despair of Oedipus, and the wild mood in which he inflicts blindness upon himself. He comes upon the stage piteously wailing and groping his way. He prays for death or banishment at the hands of Creon, who is now king. He takes a tender farewell of his daughters and consigns them to Creon's care.

The play ends with the solemn warning of the chorus “to reckon no man happy till ye witness the closing day; until he pass the border which severs life from death, unscathed by sorrow.”
he rushes blindly on to know the rest of the fatal truth. The shepherd is summoned who had given the baby to the old Corinthian. He strives to avoid answering, but, driven on by the threats of Oedipus, he at last states that he had received the child from the royal household of Thebes, and that it was in fact the son of Jocasta. At this last and awful disclosure Oedipus goes off the stage in a fit of raving madness.

Third choral interlude.—The chorus reflects upon the dangerous position of the man who is unduly exalted, and illustrates this principle by the case of Icarus.

Exode.—Although there is a short chorus interjected here (lines 980–997) on the inevitableness of fate, all the remainder of the play is really the exode, showing the catastrophe in its final manifestation. A messenger describes with horrible minuteness how Oedipus in his ravings has dug out his eyes. At this point Oedipus himself comes upon the stage, rejoicing in his blindness, since now he can never look upon his shame. And now Jocasta appears, having heard strange rumours. On learning the whole truth, she slays herself on the stage with Oedipus’ sword. The play ends as the blind old king goes groping his way out into darkness and exile.
PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN BY RICHARD CLAY AND COMPANY, LTD., BUNGAY, SUFFOLK.